MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Fuchsias.

In this busy time there is likely to be a neglect of reserving some good stock for yourself. It is all sell now and every effort and energy is used to fill orders. Some stock is easily picked up later in the season but others must be bought for good money and if the season is past money won't buy it. Put by one or two good large plants of the varieties of fuchsias that you intend to grow another year. You can't get satisfactory cuttings early in the winter from weak, unripened wood. Take the good, big fuchsia plants and plunge them out of doors in the shade or where they will get only the morning sun. These by fall will make good, firm wood, which, if handled rightly, will give the best of cuttings next December. We don't grow many fuchsias now but we once did and thousands are sold in our markets.

Hydrangeas.

The young hydrangeas that were propagated this winter should not be let run up in the greenhouse. They should have the leader pinched out and be plunged out of doors in 4-in. pots and when you get more time and they have more roots they will want a 6-in. pot. Those intended for Easter are best grown in pots, but those for later flowering can be planted out in good, deep soil and they lift easily. There has been a good demand for large Hydrangea Otaksa this spring, and they do make a fine and ornamental mass for the lawn, but they are worth a good deal, for it costs considerable to grow them up to a large size (say four to six feet spread) and it is worth something to store them.

A cool, light, half glazed shed where there is little artificial heat or just enough only to keep the frost out is the ideal place and it is getting now a necessity for many of us to have such a house. An ordinary greenhouse is too valuable space to store these large plants and here is the place for sweet bays, oleander and agaves and other unwieldy things that only want to be stored and not grown. It is a digression from the subject, but this storehouse is something we need and the best plan to build it I will leave for a future date. To produce these large tubs of hydrangeas you should begin now. You will likely have some plants in 6 or 7-in. pots that have not flowered abundantly and have not sold. Two or three of these planted in a butter tub or half barrel now and partly shortened back and given every encouragement to grow will make fine, large tubs for next year.

Geraniums.

Of all the plants that it is important for you to plant out in abundance for cuttings this fall is the plebeian but popular geranium. My experience is you cannot buy in this broad land such plants as you can propagate for yourself. They put in the cuttings too thick or they use stumps of hard wood. The big geranium grower is trying to get quantity before quality, so plant out plenty of the leading bedding varieties and get them into the ground at once so that they will give you lots of cuttings next September.

There are many varieties of zonal geraniums and some are local favorites in different localities. Grow what grows well in your locality and pleases your patrons. There is one semi-double pink that we bought this spring and should have bought last year. It is a grand variety. Its color and habit and bloom are splendid and I think it one of the greatest acquisitions to our rather limited number of good bedders. It is the beautiful light pink "Jean Viand." We find "Alphonse Riccard" for light scarlet; "S. A. Nutt," dark scarlet; "Beaute Poitevine," salmon; "Frances Perkins," pink, are the most valuable of all.

now. You will have a test of their growth and a good stock for next spring. Many other plants are of less importance and more easily and rapidly propagated, but a few of everything should be taken care of for it will save much annoyance.

Avoid This.

In the constant picking out of plants, particularly the geraniums, which will go on for the next two weeks I have often exercised or wents of profanity because the men if they want 50 S. A. Nutt geraniums for an order will take the best and leave a few plants standing all forlorn by themselves to dry out and be knocked over with the hose; in fact to be neglected. The excuse is "I had no time." Now it does not take 10 seconds to bunch up the few plants that you considered not quite good enough for the order. It makes the house tidy, gives you a bench to spread out crowded plants and saves lots of time in watering. I mentioned geraniums but it applies to all plants. Untidiness and disorder bring fret and worry to your already busy mind, so insist that batches of plants are kept up compact and you will save your plants, and money besides.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

Magnolia Soulangeana.

Cannas.

Cannas are another most important plant that should be planted out on your own place in large quantities. Just see how bare scarce they are today with all the thousands that the big firms raise. With these it is not necessary to take your best plants. Small plants if put out in good soil will make a big clump of roots by lifting time. It is likely you want to add a few new cannas to your collection; if so endeavor to buy them

MAGNOLIA SOULANGEANA.

This pretty hybrid magnolia has demonstrated its ability to endure our siroccos and our blizzards and deserves to be much more generally planted. It is most effective when planted in front of a clump of evergreens. In fact, all shrubs or trees that produce their flowers in advance of the foliage should be planted with a background of conifer.

The specimen illustrated is in Humboldt Park, Chicago, and it blooms about the first week in May a time when flowers are very desirable. It was planted five years ago and has been wrapped in straw every winter. This may not be necessary in the case of specimens sheltered by evergreens, but a good foot of mulch, I think, advisable, though this plant never had any. It came safe through the memorable winter of 1898-99, during which so many of our foreign acquisitions (and natives, too) lost their lives.

The large white and purplish flowers of Magnolia Soulangiana cover the tree before a single leaf has appeared, and they add a most attractive feature to our northern landscapes. It is certainly deserving of a much wider popularity than it now enjoys.

This hybrid originated with M. Soulangue, of France, who stated its parents to be M. conspicua and M. gracilis, the latter the pollen parent. But Nicholson in his Dictionary of Gardening says it is probably a natural hybrid between M. conspicua and M. obovata. We will leave this question for determination by the professors. The gardener will be satisfied to know that at least one of the pretty Chinese magnolias is hardy and satisfactory in our trying climate.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

We present herewith an engraving from a photograph of a house of chrysanthemums grown by Mr. John C. Gilbert about two months before using, piled up and mixed with a liberal quantity of old decomposed cow manure and a small quantity of leaf mold and sandy loam. After the pile had laid about two weeks, it was moved and turned again, and it received a third moving before being used.

To insure perfect drainage the following method was employed: Two narrow strips half an inch thick and three inches wide were nailed together, so as to form a V or trough, and one of these was placed between every other row of plants, the rows being ten inches apart, and the plants eight inches apart in the row. Over the surface or spaces between these I put about two inches of roughly broken soil which had not been thoroughly rotted. This means assured good drainage.

Of course, the watering and syringing was carefully done, and it was always done in the morning. At no time after the cuttings were made and potted the first time did the plants have any artificial shade. I kept the soil stirred quite frequently, in the earlier part of the season loosening it to a good depth, but later merely keeping the surface of the soil broken up.

About Sept. 15 I applied a top dressing of the same compost about an inch thick. Some of the plants were grown to single stem and some to two stems, but no stem bore more than one bud. Those grown on the side benches were in 6-inch pots.

The shield is very clearly worked out and there will be no difficulty in naming the flowers used. The picture showing the use of palms and flowers at the pier in the Albert Memorial Chapel will, we think, have more than a professional significance to many of our readers, who still claim Great Britain as their native land.

The small pictures show one florist's treatment of the cross and the harp on this occasion.

CARNATION NOTES.

By the time these notes reach you Decoration Day will be past and most of us will be about through with the main part of the spring rush. Of course you have kept your carnations in as good condition as possible until that day, as there is good money then in any kind of a flower, especially colored ones.

How unfortunate it is that we have no scarlet which will stand the heat of our summers like some of the whites and pinks do. A red Ethel Crocker would be a money maker. We are now finding out what a grand summer variety this is. The blooms right now are as large as in mid-winter and the color is grand. It is by far the best pink coming into this market at present. Flora Hill is about the only white variety that is producing good blooms, White Cloud being a poor hot weather variety.

Many of the benches might as well be cleared off now as soon as possible as it does not pay to water a lot of plants which are producing no blooms. Pull up the plants and take them out, but leave the soil on the benches to thoroughly dry out before taking it out. When taking the soil out don't pile it up in a heap, but spread it out in a layer about eighteen inches or two feet deep, and allow it to freeze thoroughly next winter. Then spread on a good coat of lime and manure and in the spring pile it up and mix thoroughly. This soil will make fine stuff for potting all kinds of bedding stock, and if there was no disease in the carnations that were planted in it, it will answer very well for potting the young carnation plants.

I have used the same soil over again in benching carnations after it had been exposed to the weather a couple of years and with good results, but of course you must be careful to use none that had diseased carnations growing on it, and you must enrich it well. A good plan is to sow oats or rye or something else which makes quick growth on the soil while it is spread out and when in full growth, about a foot high, pile it up. This will make it almost as good as fresh soil. Unless the soil is quite heavy we mix in only cow and sheep manure, as these do not lighten the soil as much as stable manure does, and be sure to add some lime.

Next time you house your carnations plant together in the same house those varieties which keep up best in summer so that you can entirely empty most of your houses soon after Decoration Day and get them into shape for planting again early. If there has been much trouble with any kind of insect or disease you can use the strongest kind of disinfectant without sacrificing any good stock. The houses should be thoroughly cleaned out and fumigated with sulphur every summer, and a good coat of whitewash put on all the benches and walls. A more, gardener to Hon. S. B. Elkins, Elkins, W. Va. In response to our request Mr. Gilmore gives us the following description of his cultural methods:

"The cuttings were struck about March 1st, and when rooted were potted in 2½-inch pots. In due time they were shifted to 4-inch, and then to 5-inch, using only ordinary good soil and not any special compost or mixture. The plants were transferred from the 5-inch pots to the bench about July 15th. This is a center bench which is 8 feet wide and 60 feet long. The soil was sod cut from an old pasture field, which had been

"There were no imperfect blooms in the house and quite a number of the flowers measured 7 to 10 inches; there were practically no small blooms. The foliage was clean and extra good and remained so until the plants were through blooming."

ENGLISH FLORAL WORK.

We present herewith several more pictures of floral arrangements seen at the funeral of Queen Victoria. The two larger pictures are from photographs and the two smaller ones are reproduced from the Gardener's Chronicle.

good drying out is also one of the very best things to kill all kinds of fungus.

Do all you can to keep those houses cool in which the plants are to keep on blooming, and keep the air moving. Every spring about this time we take out a pane from each fourth row of glass near the bottom to let in fresh air and we find it a great benefit, as the top ventilators are insufficient during the hot summer months. Side ventilators are better if your houses are built separate, and they should be kept open all day and all night. Give plenty of water both overhead and at roots, and attend to the disbudding faithfully. It pays to keep up the quality; true, you do not get as much for them as you did in the winter, but your expenses are lighter, too, and your profit almost as large on what you do sell. The demand seems to increase every summer for good carnation blooms.

Put on more shade as it may be needed. We use the old-fashioned way (lime and water) and we like it best, because a good rain or two will take it off. It has to be put on two or three times each summer, but that is easier than to rub it off in the fall like you have to do with the various white lead preparations. We use an ordinary hand syringe to spray it on, making countless little spots all over the glass; we prefer this to the strip of shading down the center of the glass. A. F. J. BATH.

HARDY PERENNIALS.

If any person interested in this class of plants will look over the catalogues of the nurseries or florists dealing in them he will observe that a vast majority of the plants included under that head and offered with various degrees of praise are likely to produce a satisfactory showing only in the hands of an expert cultivator and in special locations. By far the greater number of purchasers of plants have only the most general idea of the requirements of vegetation and neither time nor money to spend on experimenting. Consequently any plant which will not succeed under average conditions of weather, culture and location is more than likely to be voted a failure by the dissatisfied buyer.

Again, he may select something commended in the catalogues as "showy and of easy culture," to find at the end of the season that it will entail years of labor to clear his grounds of the myriads of seedlings or suckers generated by his new acquisition of too easy culture. This spreading habit is less likely to cause serious trouble in private grounds than in parks, yet it is well to avoid plants which are too spontaneous.

To sum up the requirements of an ideal hardy perennial it should be able to endure any ordinary winter without any protection save what nature may give it in the way of fallen leaves, and not be too sensitive to drought in summer. It should be of sufficient size to make a show. Many fine flowers lack the size necessary to show off their beauty. It should not be a spreader either by seeds, roots or stolons. Its habit of growth should not interfere with its neighbor plants.

Here is a brief list of plants which will be found to comply with most of the above requirements. Several are indigenous to this region and of wide distribution in other parts of the country.

Desirable Asters—Aster nove an-glic, purple-rose and white, of compact root habit and spreads but little by seed; Aster multilorus, profuse bloom and heathery habit, pure white; Aster cordifolius, tall compact bunches and large thyrse of purplish-white flowers; Aster sericeus, satin leaved aster, beautiful flowers, but the plant is rather deficient in size; it will grow in very dry places.

Most of our native golden rods are objectionable because of excessive production of prostrate root stocks. These three make pretty compact groups and are of moderate height. Solidago latifolia, S. rigida, S. speciosa.

The boltonias are much admired for their graceful aspect and beautiful daisy-like flowers. Boltonia latiscapula and Boltonia asteroides are satisfactory plants.

Helianthus autumnale is a very showy flower, native here. There are some handsome varieties, but less hardy than the type.

There are a few of the sunflowers that can be admitted into our list. Helianthus decapetalus, an attractive sulphur-yellow flower, 5 or 6 feet, grows in dense masses; Helianthus orgyalis, tall, of graceful appearance, roots compact and permanent; Helianthus multiflorus fl. pl., the dwarf double sunflower, too well known to require any remarks; Helianthus rigidus; this and the last species require to be reset each spring, as the offsets by which they are reproduced straggle away from the parent group which dies out; they are well worth the trouble, as they are very effective.

One other composite plant, Echinops ritro, is quite hardy, very ornamental, foliage and flower of good size, a fine blue, and comparatively little known. Other species of this plant are also in cultivation, but ritro will give the best general satisfaction.

In addition to the six genera already enumerated, our list will include

- Aquilegia Canadensis*.
- Aquilegia vulgaris*.
- Paeonia officinalis* vars.
- Paeonia* var. tennifolia.

- Funkia undulata*.
- Funkia undulata media picta*.
- Funkia subcordata*.
- Hemerocallis flava*.
- Hemerocallis Sieboldii*.
- Hemerocallis Thunbergii*.
- Papaver orientale*.
- Delphinium formosum*.
- Delphinium bicolor*.
- Cassia Marilandica*.
- Dodecatheon Meadia*.
- Hibiscus Moscheutos*.
- Hibiscus Moscheutos albus* "Crimson Eye."
- Hibiscus militaris*.
- Iris germanica* varieties.
- Iris siberica*.
- Lycynis chalcidensis*.
- Platyodon grandiflora*.

These twelve genera will be generally satisfactory for hardness, size and adaptability under ordinary conditions of culture.

It must not be supposed, however, as many seem to believe, that these or any other perennials will grow year after year and give satisfactory results entirely without care or assistance. Most of them after they are established will produce more shoots from the roots than would have room or nourishment to develop properly. The weaker ones should be removed as early as possible. Amateur cultivators should above all avoid having the soil too rich, and be very chary of over watering.

CULTIVATION OF FIELD-GROWN ROSES FOR THE TRADE.

By JOHN GILL, West Berkeley, Cal.

(Read before the Pacific States Floral Congress in San Francisco.)

The culture of roses in open ground varies but little from other nursery stock. The cuttings or rooted stocks are planted during the winter or early spring months in ground that has been prepared for that purpose. They should be planted in straight rows of about four feet apart, and from eight inches to one foot apart in the row; this allows ample room to hoe between the plants in the row, and between the rows to plow and cultivate. This should be done in a most thorough manner throughout the season. This not only gives the plants a chance to make a good growth, but it has a tendency to keep that troublesome pest, the gopher, out as he has very little use for well cultivated land.

Roses like new land; it is a great mistake to try and take several crops off the same piece of land, and it cannot be done with good success. When grown on fresh soil many of the stronger growing kinds will make fine plants the first year, but the slower growing varieties will take from two to three years to make salable plants; it is well also to grow them without irrigation, as they will make plants which will give the purchaser much better satisfaction, being more dormant than irrigated stock. They will start much better and they can be grown very successfully in this vicinity without any irrigation.

Roses are mostly started from cuttings or from rooted stocks or seedlings imported from Europe. When cuttings are to be used they should be made from good hard wood during the winter or early spring months and planted as soon after as the ground is in condition to receive them. Imported stocks may also be put in at the same time.

The two methods of growing roses in this state are principally used, namely, on their own roots and budded. To the latter I wish to call especial attention as I consider them by far superior to plants grown on their own roots, as it has a tendency to make the weaker growing varieties much more vigorous, being worked on a strong root and they will give a great deal better satisfaction.

The principal stocks used for budding are the Manetti, De la Grifferie, Rosa Canina or Dog Rose, Flor de Rosomones, Castellian, and the Evergreen stocks. Many of the growers have their preferences regarding the different varieties of stocks and I am satisfied that the rose has its. I find that one variety will do well on one stock while only a partial success on another, and a complete failure on a third; and there is no way by which their preference may be found out that I know of except by experimenting with them. This takes many months, if not years, to accomplish.

I feel that many of our eastern friends in the trade are making a mistake on the subject of grafted roses on the Manetti, for two reasons. First, it is an undisputable fact that many of the tea varieties will not make a good union on that stock, much preferring some other stock. This is shown by the fact that, although they often make a strong growth they are apt to break off where they are grafted or budded, while if they are worked on a stock which they prefer, it is almost impossible to break them after they have made a union. Of course, it must be understood that this does not apply to all tea varieties, for some of them will make an excellent union on the Manetti and for such varieties I consider it an excellent stock. Second: The Manetti stock gets practically dormant during the winter months, more so than any of the other stocks mentioned, except the canina, and it must be expected that the varieties worked on it will be in the same condition to a certain extent, greatly to their detriment for forcing during the winter months, just the time the grower wants flowers and must have them. It can be readily seen that if they were worked on stocks which grow freer during the winter months they would be a great deal more preferable for growing under glass. The foregoing reasons will have the same bearing on budded stock grown in this state and not a small portion of which is sold to florists to be grown in their houses for cut flowers.

The stocks previously referred to must be kept thoroughly cultivated so as to be ready to be budded, which should be done between the first of June and the first of October, the buds to be inserted close to the ground and thoroughly tied. Raffia I consider the best tying material. Great care must be taken to have the buds well matured, as it is a very difficult matter to get a good stand off soft buds; also care must be taken in cutting the buds not to get them mixed in any way. After the stocks have been budded, little else is required to be done till the winter, save the cutting of the strings, which will have to be done in about three or four weeks after budding, according to the growth of the stocks. During the winter the top will want to be cut back to the bud and all the weeds carefully removed before the buds begin to start or there will be great danger of breaking the young buds off, and the ground should be thoroughly worked as soon as it becomes dry enough to permit.

As soon as the warm weather begins the buds will start readily and make a very strong, vigorous growth, and during the month of May will be a sight worth looking at and long to be remembered.

The roses so grown should have no irrigation whatever, allowing them to dry off naturally after having made their summer's growth. They will be ready for transplanting any time after the first of September, in fact often before that. The forcing varieties so grown cannot be excelled for greenhouse culture. Flowers may be cut from them in about six weeks after planting and will continue to bloom through the season, giving the very finest qualities of flowers, in fact they may be carried over for several years with excellent results. For general sales, the handling of roses begins about the first of November or as soon as the wet weather begins and lasts till about the first of March. In handling roses care must be taken to give them all the roots possible and precaution must be taken against getting the varieties mixed, for it is difficult for one to separate them who is not thoroughly familiar with the looks of the wood, in fact in some cases it is utterly impossible.

Care must be taken not to expose the roots to the sun or drying wind any more than possible, for if they once get dried out it will take them a long time to recover from the effects of the same. After being dug, all the leaves should be removed, as they will only wither on the plants and give them a bad appearance; then they should be tied in bundles, carefully labeling the same, and after puddling the roots they will be ready for packing and shipping. In handling the roses a great difference may be seen between budded plants and those on their own roots. The former will have a great quantity of active roots, while the latter will have in most cases only two or three straggly ones and will not start for the purchaser nearly as soon or as strong as the budded stock, and will not give near the satisfaction for a long time to come if at all.

At this point I wish to speak of the two principal objections to budded stock. The first is suckers, but if the buds have been worked on carefully prepared stocks and properly planted, there will be little cause to complain from that source. The other, though less frequent, objection, is to their not doing well, but of this we hear little, the principal cause of which is either being worked on inferior stocks or not on the right kind of a stock, but to this I have previously referred.

The varieties of roses grown are almost endless in number, some of the nurseries carrying between three and four hundred varieties in stock; but for many of these there is but little call.

By far the greatest demand is for the varieties now so extensively forced under glass, which we see so beautifully and extensively displayed in our florists' windows, and, of course, all lovers of flowers must have them in their yards. Those varieties principally are the Bride, Bridesmaid, Madame Caroline Testout, K. A. Victoria, American Beauty, Papa Goutier, La France, Perle des Jardins, Souv. de President Carnot, and Belle Siebrecht, all of which will give excellent results outside in this vicinity. Other very popular varieties for general planting are Safrano, Rainbow, Niphotos, Sunset, White La France, Marie Van Houthe, Madame Lambert, Maman Cochet, Madame Hoste, Empereur de Morocco, Paul Neyron, Isabella Sprunt and Viscountess Folkestone, in fact, it is hard for me to bring this list to a close as there are so many favorites. In climbers there are Marechal Niel, La Marque, Cloth of Gold, Climbing La France, Climbing Niphotos, Climbing Perle, Gloire de Dijon, Gloire de Margottin, Rev. d'Or, Reine Marie Henriette, Wm. Allen Richardson, Banksias and Beauty of Glazenwood.

The last named is a beautiful thing when it gets several years' growth on it. The Hybrid Perpetuals and Mosses, I have almost excluded from the list, as the call for them is limited. Crimson Rambler is now used very extensively as a pot plant for forcing for Easter. There are other exceptionally fine old varieties which are practically unknown to the rose lover of to-day, and which should be in every collection, such as Adam, Souvenir d'un Ami, Eliza Savage, Bengere, La Sylphide, Shirley Hibbard, Madame Willermoz, Rubens, Devonensis and many others that I might mention.

The demand for field grown roses was never greater than at the present time, in fact it is almost impossible to get a list of any size of the popular varieties from any of the principal growers late in the season, they being sold out of most of them. One reason for this is that the trade, that is, I mean the retail dealers, are fast learning that they can buy a much larger and stronger plant for less money than they possibly can grow it for in their small yards, to say nothing of the better satisfaction it will give their customers. Also that the small roses grown in the east and sent out here by mail at seemingly a very small price have proven to be anything but satisfactory and dear at any price, as very few of them live or ever give satisfaction, and the general rose buyers are fast learning that they are not to be compared with thoroughly ripened California field grown stock. Another reason is that we can grow any of the tender sorts here without any protection, which cannot be done in any of the other states; hence our market is not confined to this state alone, but they are shipped over the entire coast, and I think the time not far distant when they will be grown here in large quantities for the eastern market, for already many have been shipped there. There are also a great many used for greenhouse forcing, which I have previously referred to.

In conclusion I would say that in order that the demand for field grown roses may continue, strictly first class stock must be put on the market and the same at a fair and reasonable figure.

CALLAS IN ROSE HOUSE.

We are planning to grow 200 callas in our rose house this coming winter. The house is the north house in a range of three and we thought of planting the callas on the south bench under which are the return hot water pipes, and where the temperature will be 58 to 62 degrees at night. Will this be too warm for the callas? D. C. N.

If I state the requirements of the callas it will answer the purpose without selecting any particular spot in the houses described. Callas want the fullest light. They may flower in a shaded house but they will have long weak stems and the flower will not be of good quality. To grow them profitably they should be kept at a temperature of not less than 60 degrees at night.

If you have to buy the bulbs I would procure them as soon as convenient. Don't get the very large bulbs; medium size are best. Start them growing in a 5-inch pot and shift them later into a 7-inch. Plunge them out of doors in the broad sun and keep them well supplied with water during summer. Bring into the house before there is any danger of frost, say the middle of September. By this method you will get flowers early.

Callas are sometimes planted out on a bench, but they scarcely give as many flowers during winter as when grown in pots. Use a good heavy loam with about one-fourth of manure. There is nothing further to be said in growing callas. Usually they are kept too cold to be profitable. There is no reason why they should not be grown in a rose house as the syringing that roses get is entirely agreeable to them. In fact, if kept at a high temperature callas should be frequently syringed. WILLIAM SCOTT.

CRIMSON RAMBLERS.

I have a few plants of Crimson Rambler rose that were received late in the fall and were outside grown. They were potted upon arrival and kept in a temperature of 40 to 45 degrees until they broke, which was from a foot to eighteen inches from top of pot. Now they have some bloom, and shoots from seven to eight feet long without bloom. Ought I to cut these shoots back? If so, when? And how far? Or shall I let them grow? A. S. C.

If the Crimson Ramlers have made three or four good strong shoots that is just what you want to give a good crop of bloom for next Easter. I would cut off the shoots that are bearing flowers. The greatest danger with this early growth is that they are liable to break again on this year's wood and will make lateral growths which will not give you the best trusses.

Keep them growing in a light house with plenty of ventilation until about July 1st. Avoid an attack of mildew, which sometimes troubles them and much impairs their vigor. Towards fall, say in September and October when the canes are ripening, we frequently get copious rains. This tends to start the buds, which you can avoid by laying the plants on their sides. If you can get strong, well ripened canes by next October you are sure then, with anything like ordinary treatment and by starting them into growth about Christmas, of a fine pot of roses.

We know very well that the large growers of the east depend mostly on the lifted plants and are uniformly successful with them. I have tried hard to be successful with this method, but have always had to depend on plants lifted from the ground two or three hundred miles away and shipped to me. I have never yet succeeded in getting them to break satisfactorily and have now some fifty plants just in about the same condition as those of your correspondent. I believe if you have them growing on your own place and there is not the slightest drying out between their being dug and potted, kept dark and cool and moist for two or three weeks, that the lifted plants are just as good as those grown over summer in pots.

But as I have said above, if you have three or four well ripened canes on a plant that has been grown in a pot the previous summer you are absolutely sure to be able to force it as early as you like and most satisfactorily. If successful with the fall lifted plants it is undoubtedly cheaper than having to grow a plant all summer with its watering and other care. WILLIAM SCOTT.

GLASS.

Under date of May 27th the Sprague-Smith Co., Chicago, quote prices on greenhouse glass as follows:

14x18 and 16x18 double thick A glass, $6.64 per box; double thick B of same sizes, $6.20 per box.

16x20 and 16x24 double thick A glass, $7.28 per box; double thick B of same sizes, $6.64 per box.

These prices are subject to a cash discount of 2 per cent.

As to the general conditions of the glass market they report:

"With the exception of about six co-operative factories, all the window glass factories in the United States have closed and will not make any more glass until fall. These co-operative factories, we understand, will close May 30th.

"The market is firm and we are assured by the manufacturers that there will not be any lower prices made until after the glass factories start in the fall, and the outlook is that the factories will not start until late."

CLOSED OUT ALL STOCK.

A few words in regard to your classified ads. Last year, late in the season, we had a surplus stock of some considerable thousands of asters on hand, and had about concluded the season was over, but your classified ads, coming to our notice, although we are rather conservative in regard to new things, we concluded to try them, as the rates were so reasonable that there could not be but a small loss if we received no returns. The effect was that we closed out all the stock and returned some cash to customers whose orders we could not fill.—A. & G. ROSNACU, Pemberton, N. J., June 11, 1900.

AN EVENING AT LONESOME-HURST.

The assertion that Jaggs couldn't go from Detroit to Windsor without traveling by way of the Hudson Bay route is possibly an exaggeration, but it was generally believed that he found it difficult to journey from Newark to Madison without steering off towards Philadelphia, owing to a slight misunderstanding with some lights of the profession in the vicinity of Short Hills. Somewhere in that neighborhood he had hypnotized a guileless newcomer into making him foreman of a freshly-built range, a position he supported with much dignity for upwards of forty-eight hours. The proprietor was a youthful hardware man. He had been told that there was a lot of money in the florist business—a fact he was ready to believe, after dropping most of his own coin into it; the only trouble being that he couldn't get any of it out again. Jaggs never explained his early separation from the hardware man except to assert that unfortunate was not what he called a thoroughbred. It appears, however, that in the ardor of celebrating his elevation, Jaggs traded off a case of auratum bulbs for a brindled bulldog with a 10x12 pedigree, this animal being looted from a near neighbor, who openly alluded to the hardware man as a dog robber in consequence. The fact that Jaggs potted a choice collection of tuberous begonias on orchid blocks caused no comment at the time, because the hardware man didn't know the difference. He had been heard to remark that in engaging a man like Jaggs he was sure to acquire a vast fund of practical experience, and there is every reason to believe that he did.

When Jaggs drifted back to Lonesomehurst he did not at once ask for his old job. The boss first caught sight of the prodigal melodiously whistling "The Holy City," while removing a mealy bug from a veteran stephanotis, this being an occupation that would keep an active man busy 367 days a year. The boss said nothing, and about the only formal welcome offered was from Carrie Nation and Dr. Parkhurst, a couple of respectable tame lizards which had a habit of following the men about the warm houses, where they were fed with casual insects. When the potting shed parliament met in the evening, however, there were two years' questions to ask. The horticultural graduate had disappeared. "Blessed if he ain't teachin' literature in a bloomin' young ladies' seminary," said Tommy Atkins, with disgust. "What does a johnny like that try to break into the flower trade for?" Tommy himself had departed suddenly at the outbreak of the South African war, returning more than a year later, very thin, very brown, and very uncommunicative, with a slight limp and a surprisingly accurate acquaintance with Transvaal scenery. It was currently believed that he had again adorned the British army in the interval, and that his departure from it had been effected quite informally, but this, as Tommy had observed with some emphasis, "wasn't nobody's bloomin' business."

After supper the men settled down on an array of crates and boxes outside the potting shed. Davy was the last to join them, his sandy hair wet and streaky from a bath in one of the tanks; he sat down without a look at Jaggs, and began to pack tobacco into his cutty pipe.

"Nec, sociable way Scotty has, hasn't he," observed Jaggs, admiringly. "But ain't he a bit talkative?"

Davy lighted his pipe solemnly, and began to study an Australian paper sent him by a wandering relative. "Will ye be reading about that petrified Australian gum that they dug up over there?" he observed to the company at large. "Kauri gum, they call it—it's from dead and gone fir trees, and they use it for varnish—dig it up like ye dig coal."

"Yes," remarked Jaggs, reflectively, "it reminds me a bit of that place out Calgary way, in Northwest Territory, where a chap got me into a scheme for minin' petrified maple sugar."

"Now, go light, old man," advised Tommy Atkins. "Most of us has been in Canada our own selves. Better stick to Borneo."

Jaggs paused to extract a wisp from the potting shed broom, with which he cleaned his pipe. Then, puffing furiously to restore its impeded circulation, he continued:

"It was a chap from Southampton that got me into the business; said as he used to be a missionary to the Indians up in the Barren Grounds around Hudson Bay, but I reckon collections was slow, and one winter his dog train ate the churche."

"Sure it was a dog train?" inquired Tommy, pleasantly. "Or was they ostriches?"

"His dogs," repeated Jaggs, firmly, "ate the church, which was built, of course, of skins stretched over whalebone. They don't run to brownstone fronts up in the Arctic circle. It was when he was comin' home as he struck the maple sugar. He see a bear diggin' up rocks, eatin' 'em and lookin' pleased, which ain't natural for a bear. He says the bear looked at him and winked, which maybe he did. Anyway, when the old chap strolled off, Higginson, which was the reformed missionary, took hold o' the rock, and sees it was maple sugar—a regular mine of it. It was all in blocks."

"One-pound bricks, none genuine without maker's guarantee, I suppose," observed Tommy.

"Lookin' as fresh as paint," continued Jaggs, fixing Tommy with a disapproving glare. "Higginson says he thought on the dot his fortune was made—all he has to do to lap up simoleons by the barrelful was to get that sugar on the market. Higginson wanted to label it 'Pure Vermont Maple Sugar,' but I says 'No, Higginson,' I says, 'the truth or nothin' for me.' One o' them scientific chaps tell me afterwards as how them prehistoric maples had a loss-up with an earthquake and a volcano or two, and the sugar was filed away like coal. We'd made a lot o' dough if it hadn't been for a man from Ohio."

"Got there first, I s'pose?" said the fireman.

"He loaded the market with pure maple sugar made o' sorghum flavored with maple chips and aniline dye—put it up in fancy packages with colored labels and a lot o' south wind about the pure products o' nature. Course we hadn't no chance. Last I hear o' the missionary chap he was shootin' biscuits at a railroad restaurant, and talked about joinin' the Salvation Army. I reckon he must have a grudge against them Salvationists."

"It was right after that I went rose-growing with a natural hot-water plant; had a range o' modern houses built over a geyser, you know. A chap from East Pohannock, Me., started it. He says all you have to do is to make sure you've got a reliable geyser, and then arrange your flow and return accordin'. Greatest scheme on earth. No coal bills, no cinders, no fireman—makes natural gas look like 30 cents."

"Did it work?" inquired the fireman, with natural interest in the subject.

"For a while," responded Jaggs, thoughtfully. "The trouble was that we didn't get a reliable geyser. It used to sulk some days, and lower the pressure, and then it would turn on a full head o' steam when we was tryin' to cool off—didn't seem to take kindly to harness, I thought. Poor Hiram, he was a good chap, though he couldn't grow Beauties." Jaggs picked up his cap, which gave circumstantial evidence of having belonged to a much larger man, and prepared to leave.

"Here, what happened to the geyser," inquired a general chorus.

"I don't rightly know," said Jaggs. "I came back from a trip to Minneapolis—"

"There ain't no geysers around Minneapolis," began the fireman, firmly. "I come from St. Paul, and—"

"Did I say there was?" asked Jaggs. "What does a chap from St. Paul know about Minneapolis, anyway? I come back from Minneapolis, and when I get to the greenhouses there wasn't nothink there but a geyser near as big as Lake Erie, steamin' away like a million wash kettles at once. I don't know where the greenhouses was, but I hear they had a rain o' rose bushes as nobody couldn't account for, about 250 miles south, so I reckon that's where our Beauties and Meteorers went."

"Whaur was Hiram?" asked Davy, addressing Jaggs for the first time.

"Well, I couldn't rightly say," returned Jaggs, "because I didn't know nothink about his past life. But he must have gone a good way up, for I reckon he hasn't lit yet."

There was a brief pause. The boss' parrot, which was moulted extensively as the result of a difference with the greenhouse cat, was heard swearing cheerfully in the distance. Jaggs filled his borrowed pipe with annexed tobacco, and the audience gradually drifted away. The general sentiments were expressed by Tommy, who remarked sleepily:

"Same old Jaggs, bless him! He'll be a loss to the trade if he ever does damp off, but I reckon he's like the Wanderin' Jew—he's set for eternity, and they'll have to slug him on the day o' judgment!"

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

I have read with interest the report of the work of the incorporators of the S. A. F. as regards affiliation of co-operative societies and I heartily approve of all they have done. It seems to me that they have brought about an affiliation which will tend to the benefit of both the parent society and its active offspring without impairing independent work of the co-operative societies. I agree with that clause which gives one delegate from each society the right to act with the Executive Board.

These co-operative associations or societies have done an immense amount of good work and it is from them that the most active work and progress must be expected, and their relations to the S. A. F. and O. H. will not hamper them in the least. There is one fact connected with all this that is comforting and will doubtless be the means of there being the heartiest co-operation between us all, and that is that every good and active member of any one of the co-operative societies is a loyal and good and active member of the S. A. F. & O. H. It seems to me the incorporators have done good and conscientious work and the floral fraternity of the whole country owes them a hearty vote of thanks.

WM. SCORR.

In the Minneapolis Journal of May 18 appears an illustrated article by Prof. Conway MacMillan on the Pacific Coast Botanical station now being established on Vancouver Island.

PHILADELPHIA.

Business Conditions.

Society has made an unexpected departure. The old legend

"If you are married in May,

has been decided silly. Consequently many of the pretty girls are breaking away from the old custom of being married in June and are showing good common sense by choosing the present time for their weddings.

The demand for choice roses is brisk; the supply is not excessive and prices are firm. It is not always easy to get really fine flowers now. The growers with solid beds now have the best stuff unless the man with his plants in raised benches is a very artist in his profession. Beauties, specials, bring from $2 to $2.50, occasionally $3 per doz.; Kaisersins, $6 per 100; Brides and Maids, $4 to $5 per 100; carnations, 75 cents to $1.50 per 100; fancies, $2. Sweet peas, 50 cents to $1 per 100. Owing to the dark weather they are not plentiful.

Decoration Day prospects for cut flowers are bright. Though Japanese snow balls and peonies will not be in flower in quantity there will be plenty of common snow balls, white wigeia and other out-door stock to reinforce that grown indoors. Dentzia is over. There is a good deal of valley about.

The phenomenally backward season has upset the plantmen's calculations. The beds are not being planted as rapidly as usual and the plants need sun badly to open their blooms for the 30th. Red geraniums in flower appear scarce, so also, heliotrope, fuchsias, verbenas, etc. Plenty of plants but not plenty in bloom is the general feeling.

Various Notes.

A new departure is noticed in decorating. The church at the corner of Eighteenth and Stiles streets has bought a number of large palms, many of them from J. Wm. Colflesh, for decorating. It is intended to build a small conservatory in the churchyard for these plants before cold weather sets in.

William K. Harris has a fine lot of 6-inch Spirea japonica, well grown, that bring $3 a doz. He is cutting a few scarlet peonies.

Julius Koebler & Sons grew 10,000 geraniums this season. They have done well with them and expect to have few left at the end of this week. A new greenhouse built last fall has given good returns.

Robert Crawford, Jr., has moved out to his country place, where he has many shrubs planted for cut flowers. It is understood that he expects to grow asters and violets there.

H. H. Battles has purchased the farm adjoining his present place at Newtown Square. This tract of land includes about thirty-three acres admirably suited for cultivating, having scarcely a tree or stone on it.

The Century Flower Shop has made a specialty of the unique sensitive plant in small pots. The stock at this up-to-date place always appears bright and fresh.

Chas. A. Knapp is doing well with crotons, which are now in demand. The price is $3 to $6 per doz.

C. J. Ranicar, known to most of us as the manager of the firm who sells us iron pipe, and to some of us as a good bowler, is now in business for himself, at 526 Arch street. He is busy as a bee.

The Florists' Bowling Club has been doing finely throughout the winter. We are not going to say much except that we hope to roll with you at Buffalo, Mr. Scott.

So much interest has been shown in the identity of the writers of these notes that it seems but fair to corroborate the statement made by our croton expert that chrysanthemum notes were not written either in 1897 or 1898 by the real PHIL.

BUFFALO.

The past two weeks have been rather an eventful time with many of our citizens, but you cannot say that the crowd is here yet. Dedication day filled up the streets and gave us a taste of what we may expect later in the season. The visit of Vice-President Roosevelt and other distinguished guests gave rise to several decorations more or less elaborate. Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt were kept busy up till Tuesday night of last week attending some affair in their honor. Morning, noon and evening, instead of shooting lions in the Rockies, fair eyes were shooting at him.

It is only within the last two weeks that there have been any flowers going to waste. Now there is rather an excess of roses and carnations. What a splendid spring carnation the Marquis is proving. It puts all the other pinks in the shade, or appears to because our crop of Lawson is a little off. Sweet peas are in great abundance and fine, with not a very brisk demand. It appears now that all outside flowers are quite ten days later than the average season, and this makes it about right for Decoration Day. Late tulips that are usually over will be at their best, and so will lily of the valley and lilies. Peonies are very late, but we never expect to get any of those till the 10th of June. There was a lively demand for plants a week ago, and many people wanted their yards fixed up by Decoration Day, but a very cool, wet spell has put a damper on their anxiety, and the rush will not begin for a few days yet.

As I expected, there is going to be a more than ordinary demand for all kinds of decorative plants. Many hotels and fashionable boarding places are putting on extra frills and in many ways the demand will be increased. We could with justice to ourselves and without the slightest extortion raise the price of our plants this spring for nearly everything that goes to produce them has cost us more, but I don't suppose we will get any material advance. We can, however, be firm and make no material reductions for the sake of getting an order.

Among the visitors of the week have been Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Groff of Simcoe, Ont., William T. Bell of Franklin, Pa., Mr. Broadhead, with his manager, Mr. Roney, of Jamestown, Mr. Dille-muth of Toronto. If I don't extend the same time and attention to a florist friend now-a-days that I always liked to they must remember the wish is there but the opportunity is not.

At the last moment who should come in the Horticulture Building but the majestic Mr. Bob Halliday of Baltimore. He was up as far as Watkins, this state, and could not resist a few hours' visit to the Pan-American. He was amazed and charmed, and has gone back to Baltimore to bring everybody up here in August.

Mr. Adams informs me that he has engaged amongst other places the Larkin Flats. This is an entirely new house, most centrally situated in a beautiful part of the city, and will accommodate 150 people. Any one finding room in this place cannot but be satisfied.

W. S.

PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION.

Ten days of almost continual rain and drizzle with a low temperature has retarded work and dampened the spirits of all who need fine weather to complete their work. The blanket of the Indian is wet and soggy, and the voice of the Midway Barker is hoarse and despondent. But this state of things cannot last and when summer weather comes beauty will reign on every hand.

Mr. Ulrich, in spite of the weather, has been placing a great many evergreens and large masses of rhododendrons in the Grand Court and Sunken Gardens. On each side of the Grand Court there is an avenue of palms and sweet thays which add greatly to the beauty of the scene, as they are a relief from the buildings and statuary. One of the prettiest views, at least horticulturally, is the Mall. Once this was old Amherst street. The banks on each side now slope up to an elevation of ten feet. Each side of the street is lined by rows of Lombardy poplars and on the sloping sod banks are a great number of beds of rhododendrons and azaleas which are now at their best. The pansy beds at the front of the Grand Court are now most effective. Wisely the colors have been confined to white, yellow, blue and black, and for good effect this is about all the colors in pansies you need where they are used in extensive bedding.

A great many aquatic plants have been planted in the Sunken Gardens—confined to the margins as the water in the center is too much agitated by the fountains. The Eastern Basin, known as the Court of Cypress, has lately been planted with 100 nelumbiums in three groups and 200 of the choicest nymphs in twenty-four groups. These circular basins are 120 feet in diameter. Everything has been done to insure success. Large boxes were made and fifteen inches of heavy enriched soil was placed in them. Over them will be about fifteen inches of water. As seen from the Liberal Arts Building these basins will be very beautiful and are filled entirely as an exhibit of Henry A. Dreer, Philadelphia.

In the Rose Garden, devoted to horticultural exhibits, tulips are being removed as fast as out of flower and the beds are being planted with a variety of the leading bedding plants. Cannas of many varieties will be very prominent here. There is a bed of Crimson Rambler roses covering an area of 1,300 square feet, which promises to be a brilliant mass. The many large beds of roses planted by Ellwanger & Barry, Nelson, Bogue and Jackson & Perkins, have also done well. W. Atlee Burpee & Co. have a fine bed of the Burbank rose. A little bed that is very much admired just now is the Aquilegiaerulea, the Rocky Mountain columbine, the exhibit of the Park Floral Company, of Denver. A few hundred of the many vases are now filled with specimen palms and agaves. These vases, so lavishly used, are going to add greatly to the beauty of the courts and grounds. The Mexican cacti bed is attracting a good deal of attention. It is well and artistically planted by Mr. McDowell, of Mexico City, who has charge of all the horticultural exhibits from Mexico.

I hope another week to have more in the horticultural line to report. At present the weather is good only for pansies. Our exhibition of cut peonies was to open today but we found that even in the neighborhood of New York it will be another week before any peonies, except perhaps of the officinalis type, will be in bloom, so we have decided to accept and stage peonies whenever they come and shall be glad to receive them for the next three weeks.

I would just like to mention once more how remarkably well the flowers have kept in our Horticulture Building. It has been most encouraging. Carnations lasted in good order nine days and at the rose show, just held, flowers kept in excellent order for five or six days.

WM. SCOTT.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Decoration day, cold, cloudy weather and a considerable shortening of supply have acted together to bring prices back to a pacy basis. Business is now very satisfactory, with barely enough stock to go around. The chances are that Decoration Day will find every one sold out clean and looking for more stock. The commission houses report shipping trade to be very good.

Carnations are selling now at from $1.50 to $1 per 100; roses, $3 to $5 per 100. Some extra fine iris is coming in, which readily brings 3 cents a spike. Owing to the bad weather peonies are scarce and sell at from 3 to 6 cents. Hartsii and callas sell from 50 cents to $1 per dozen. In greens, smilax is scarce at from $12.50 to $15; asparagus, 50 to 75 cents; eastern ferns, though they are poor, $2 to $2.50 per 1,000. There are but few new ferns on the market as yet, and they are very soft. It will be two weeks before these ferns will be at their best.

Various Items.

The florists back of Price Hill are reporting considerable loss of carnation plants in the field through rabbits. These animals eat the soft young plants down to the ground; they will grow up again, but into very inferior plants. William Murphy says they seem to be especially fond of Estelle plants, as they will pick that variety out of a field and leave others untouched. C. C. Murphy has already lost about one-half of his field stock, which will compel him to buy plants this fall to fill up.

Mr. J. A. Peterson's palm sale took place on Thursday last. It was a success and he is much pleased with the result. A number of the local craft were present; also Mr. John Bertermann of Indianapolis, Ind., and Mr. J. S. Wilson of Chicago.

A meeting of the florists of this city was held last Friday evening in the College Building to make arrangements for a florists' picnic. A temporary organization was effected, with C. J. Jones, president; F. Ball, secretary, and Deak Sunderbruch, treasurer. It was decided to hold a picnic at Coney Island, Thursday, July 18. The following committee of nine was appointed to make the necessary arrangements: C. Critchell, L. Kirk, H. Schwartz, O. Walke, F. Benson, A. Heckman, G. Adrian, W. Schuman, Jr., and Ben George. This committee will hold a meeting on Friday evening, May 31, to start things.

Of the growers holding stands in the Jabez Elliott flower market, all will continue holding them with the exception of five, Messrs. J. T. Conger, Fred Walz, R. A. Murphy, Carl Schweitzer and J. A. Peterson. So far there are three new firms who have taken stands for this year, Sidney Murphy, Grove Bros. and Lewis Juniet.

Mr. H. M. Altick, of Dayton, O., was in the city Sunday. He reports that the floral business in the Gem city is poor, as is most every other business, owing to the number of men who are out on strikes.

The five 100-foot greenhouses owned by Ed. Fries, situated back of Newport, Ky., are for sale. Mr. Fries intends joining forces with his father, John Fries, who is erecting five houses 150 feet long, as an addition to his plant.

Mr. Heller, of the South Park Floral Co., Newcastle, Ind., was a visitor this week. The large ranges of glass that are being erected near that city are rapidly nearing completion. He reports stock looking in all shape.

Trade Conditions.

During the week closing with the 25th a big lot of material came in, although as much of it as possible was kept back for the end of the month. But there was a surprisingly good call for all kinds of material for the date and Saturday we saw everything cleaned up in good shape, but of course prices ran a bit low all the week, matching those of the previous week exactly. Quality of the goods was hardly up to the mark. There were two reasons for this: Keeping them back as much as possible and the changeable weather. But Mark Twain tells us "New England weather is never quiet—it is always doing something!"

"Coming events cast their shadows before," and "Every cloud has a silver lining," but the shadow of our coming day has a silver lining, a greenback facing and golden trimmings. By the time you read this you will know whether my prophecy, herewith expressed, of a great plenty of goods, except roses, will be correct. Bet a cookie it is!

And what a day Memorial Day is getting to be for us! The florist gives more genuine satisfaction on that day than on any other, largely because the expense entailed is not severe to any one individual while the aggregate to the florist is considerable. The best part of the whole thing is that every cemetery gets better care during the whole year on account of it, doing away with the neglected look of so many small ones so noticeable only a few years since. I wish I could feel as well disposed toward the results of floral art upon all occasions, but think I should better make a period here. But I want to record a hope that the floral monstrosities sometimes seen are the fault of the customer's taste rather than that of the maker.

The Market.

On Tuesday the wholesalers were in all kinds of trouble trying to find stock with which to meet the great shipping demand. Orders for Decoration Day were more numerous and larger than ever before and there was much less stock than usual at the season. One thing that helped to aggravate the situation was the failure of peonies to materialize in quantity. There was a serious shortage in everything and while prices were not generally elevated they were kept stiffly up to quotations, and many orders were necessarily cut short.

The only outdoor flower that cut much figure in the market was Spiraea Van Houttei, which sold well and was a big help.

Everything available was well cleaned up and the business, though much larger than last year as it was, would have shown a great deal larger increase had there been more stock to work with.

One thing that adds to the woes of the wholesalers at busy times is the telegram which reads, "Add to my order," without specifying the order or the date it is to be shipped. Shippers keep their orders by dates for shipping and not by names and with a host of orders for various days it is a case of looking through the whole bunch when the day is not given.

Various Items.

William Fancourt, well known to the trade for many years and who had been employed in many local establishments, died at the county hospital May 20 aged about 70 years.

Albert F. Amling, the Maywood florist, is vice president and a director of the Maywood State Bank.

Mr. E. S. Thompson, manager of the West Michigan Seed Co., South Haven, Mich., was a visitor last Tuesday.

Mr. John Munro has opened his city salesroom in the place formerly occupied by Poehlmann Bros. Co. in the building at 51 Wabash avenue.

Kennicott Bros. Co. received a shipment of snowballs from Lake City, Minn., last week though this shrub is not in bloom here yet. But snowballs stand little chance in the cut flower market nowadays.

The damage to the partly constructed greenhouse of Bentley & Co., at New Castle, Ind., which was blown down in the storm, was slight and the loss was merely the labor necessary to reconstruct it, and which $100 will cover.

Mr. N. Wietor went on a fishing trip last week and he and a companion caught 160 lbs. of fish.

The chilly weather has very materially retarded the bedding out season and it may result in lessening the sales in this department. Some venturesome ones bedded out geraniums a week ago, but the plants show the effects of the weather badly, and it will probably take them a long time to fully recover. Hardy plants and shrubs are, however, in unusually fine condition, though late in blooming.

Bowling.

In the fourth series of league games played last Tuesday night the Retailers won two games from the Growers and the Growers one from the Retailers, while the Wholesalers won two from the Seedsmen and the 53-men one from the wholesalers. Only one of those prizes was shaken from the tree and this fell into the hands of George Asmus for a score of 201. The scores follow:

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

A slight improvement has been felt in the cut flower circles during the past week. The retailers have realized better prices owing to the fact that the fakirs have been kept off the streets. The supply of high-grade stock is falling off somewhat. At this writing stock is a little scarce, especially roses, and the price is up a notch or two, that is for first-class stock; on common stuff the price continues low.

Best grade American Beauties sell at $2.50 per dozen. The best grade in Meeters, Maids, Brides and Golden Gates sells at from $4 to $5; seconds at $3, short-stemmed stuff as low as $1 per 100. Some really good Jacks are now coming in and sell at $3 per 100.

Carnations are coming in in great quantities every morning and during the past week many remained unsold, and of course go to the waste pile. Only the best of stock is selling and brings from $1 to $1.50 per 100. Common in whites bring 50 cents; common in colored have little call.

Sweet peas are also very plentiful now and good in quality; the only fault with them is that the stems are very short, 25 and 30 cents is the price asked; in 1,000 lots they go at 15 and 20 cents. Peonies, white, pink and red, are becoming very plentiful and bring 3 and 4 cents and about $2 in 1,000 lots. Quality of stock good. Gladioli spikes are now coming in and have quite a demand. The best spikes bring 5 cents each. Cornflowers are not selling well at 25 cents per 100. Some extra fine white lilac from Gasser, of Cleveland, was seen at Kuehn's the past week. It sold well at $4 per 100 sprays. Smilax is selling at 15 and 20 cents per string, according to quality, and is not in oversupply.

Damage by Hail.

The terrific downpour of rain and hail, accompanied by a high wind on last Thursday afternoon and night caused great damage to some of our florists, the parks and the residence part of the city. Much damage was done in the parks and many fine trees were blown down. The following florists suffered loss by hail: Charles J. Juengel, 457 panes of glass; Meyer Bros., about 300 small panes; Wm. Schray, 75, and F. J. Fillmore, 25. The damage at John Walther's place at 3645 Iowa avenue will be about $30. Fifteen fine large trees on ex-Gov. Francis' place on Maryland avenue were broken off short. The loss to the city parks amounts to about $200 in all.

Notes.

Arnold Ringier, the popular salesman representing W. W. Barnard & Co., Chicago, was in town last week and reports the best trade in his line. Mr. Ringier is now known as Doctor Ringier. He was attacked in the hotel by a crazy person who mistook him for a doctor and only for the promptness of the manager of the hotel Arnold would have had to stay with us a few weeks longer.

Mrs. Oughton, mother of Wm. Oughton, the well known Washington avenue florist, died last Monday at her home on King's highway. Mrs. Oughton was well known among the craft, as she did all the buying at the wholesale houses. Mr. Oughton and his sister have the sympathy of all the florists.

Carew Sanders, one of the oldest and well known florists and nurserymen, who has been very sick the past two weeks has had a relapse and at this writing his condition is quite serious.

The exhibition committee met at Ellis' place on Saturday night and worked on the premium list. Chairman Meinhardt has taken hold and with the assistance of Secretary Schray and Treasurer Sanders will make the show a good one. The rest of the committee, Messrs. Windler, Ellis and Mohr, are good workers, too, and the show cannot help being a great success. All the members of the club should take hold now and give the committee all the assistance they can.

Club Meeting.

The St. Louis Florists' Club will hold its next regular meeting on Thursday afternoon, June 13, at 3 o'clock, in the Commercial Club rooms at Belleville, Ill., the home of the president of the club. President Guy has requested your correspondent to state in the next issue of the REVIEW that he expects each member of the club to make special arrangements ahead so that nothing will stand in the way of his attending this meeting. The Belleville members of the club have made special arrangements for entertaining the members. The meeting will be of great importance to all of the members and they should attend without fail. The chairmen of the different committees will make their reports. Four essays are also to be read. Those who fail to attend will miss a good time.

Bowling.

The bowling club on last Monday night rolled five games with seven bowlers in attendance. Some very good scores were made; still, they are not up to the best of the members. F. M. Ellis, our new member, is improving each night. J. W. Kunz could not attend, owing to bad eyes which have troubled him for some time. The busy time for the grocers will soon be over and Sanders, Schray, Deyer and Miller will again be on hand every Monday night. The rolling of last Monday night ended the May series of sixteen games. C. A. Kuehn was high scorer for high single score and high average. The May series ended as follows:

PITTSBURG.

The Coming Flower Show.

A special meeting of the Florists' Club was held at the Cut Flower Co.'s store, 504 Liberty street, to consider arrangements for and details of the rose show to be held by the club in this city June 13. The school room of the First German Evangelical Church, corner of Smithfield street and Sixth avenue, has been secured for the show. It is a most excellent place and in the very center and most convenient part of the city.

While outdoor roses are to be the main feature of the exhibition, all manner of other hardy flowers are to be included; also an exhibit of greenhouse flowers. And Dr. Holland, the director of the Carnegie Museum, has kindly undertaken to get up a large collection of wild flowers and name them properly and exhibit them at our show.

Everything looks fair to having a very interesting exhibition and the club members are going into it with a hearty good will. The professors of botany in the high schools have asked permission to bring their classes in a body to see the flowers, and amateurs, gardeners and park men are enthusiastic in the matter, and so are the church folks, for they have given us the use of their church without money and without price. No prizes will be given and no admission charged. Everything will be free; the club bears all expenses.

Now if any one of our good friends throughout the country have any roses or other flowers, hardy, tender or wild, they wish to show to our Pittsburg people, and they will kindly send them here so as to reach us on June 12, we shall be glad to have them and shall take care of them and stage them and affix name and address of donor to them. Please address boxes to Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., 504 Liberty street, Pittsburg, and mark on each box or basket "For Florists' Club," and they will be taken proper care of. After the show the flowers are to be sent to the different hospitals. P. A.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—The annual convention of the American Seed Trade Association will be held in this city June 11 to 13. Headquarters will be at Powers' Hotel, rates $3 to $4 a day. American plan. Rooms may be reserved by addressing Mr. W. J. Mandeville, this city.

HOLYOKE, MASS.—At the annual meeting of the Horticultural Society officers were elected as follows: Dr. E. A. Reed, president; A. F. Sickman, vice-president; G. H. Sinclair, secretary; C. E. Mackintosh, treasurer.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.—The headquarters of the American Association of Nurserymen during the annual convention, to be held here June 12 to 14, will be at the Cataract House.

IN THE advertisement of Messrs. Welch Bros. on page 843 of our last issue the quotation of $1.50 per 1,000 applied to dagger ferns only and to nothing else in the ad.

SOUTH HAVEN, MICH.—A heavy frost on May 14 did serious damage to the fruits in this section, destroying many of the blossoms.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

This has been the most remarkable spring in the memory of our oldest florists. Extremes of heat and cold have followed each other regularly for at least two months and everything, especially outside stock, has been thrown out of its regular season. The earliest shrubs were forced out ahead of time by a very hot spell early in April and a very cold spell lately and another one now have kept the late ones back.

Paconies, which are usually gone by June 1st, will not be in by Decoration Day, at which time they are in extra good demand. Up to this date (the 28th) there has not been a pacony out around here, and, as it is cold and raining and the weather man reports rain for tomorrow, we are likely to be obliged to do our Decoration Day business without paconies this year. The carnation glut of a few weeks ago is past, and there will not be enough to fill all orders. Some of the carnation growers are firing up again to partly make up for the missing sunshine.

All the plant men report a very good bedding season, except for being a trifle late. The unfavorable weather has kept geraniums and other bedding plants from blooming and many sales are lost on that account. A. B.

OCEAN CITY, N. J.

The season here is very backward, being fully ten days or two weeks late. We have had great quantities of rain, being almost inundated. The weather is cold for this place, and bedding plants that have been set out do but little good, and there is so much dampness and so little sun the plants mildew in the greenhouses. This place is built right on the shore of the Atlantic ocean and we are not more than a quarter of a mile from the breakers. In the spring and early summer the winds that blow from the ocean are very cool and this year nearly all our winds have been from the ocean; that is the reason it has been so cold and the season backward.

- Class 6—General display of all classes of hardy roses.

Entries must be received by superintendent not later than June 10th.

Exhibits must be in place not later than noon of the opening day.

Any exhibit in one class will not be considered as competing for award in other classes.

Entries should be addressed to Wm. Scott, Horticulture Building, Pan-American Exposition, Buffalo, N. Y.

Other special exhibitions to take place during the summer are as follows: Sweet Peas, July 23 to Aug. 2; Gladioli, Aug. 6 to 17; Asters, Aug. 27 to Sept. 7; Dahlias, Sept. 17 to 27; Chrysanthemums, Oct. 22 to 31.

WASHINGTON.

Everyone is astir now getting ready for Decoration Day. Stock of all kinds was in oversupply last week, but on account of cloudy weather and rain for the last few days the supply has shortened considerably.

From present indications there will be more flowers used this year than usual on account of the large number of bodies that have been brought back from the Philippines and buried at Arlington, our National cemetery.

Prices for fine stock have advanced about 25 per cent for Decoration Day. The bulk of the outdoor stuff has been ruined by the rain.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Chronicle.

GRAFTING CLEMATIS: Clay will do to cover the union if it be well made in the ordinary manner. Bottom-heat of 70 to 75 degrees is essential, also a close case, standing within a house having a temperature of 60 degrees.

CHRYSANTHEMUM: Dr. Griffiths gives the following as the composition of Chrysanthemums: Oxide of iron, 3.66; potash, 10.23; soda, 10.39; lime, 26.28; magnesia, 10.22; silica, 5.99; phosphoric acid, 19.52; sulphuric acid, 4.65; chlorine, 3.60; albuminoids, 2.92.

FLOWERING THE SECOND TIME OF LILY OF THE VALLEY: As is the three-year-old buds that produce the flowers, and these, and the second, and one year growths must be made in the open ground, either separately as crowns, or altogether as clumps. The growth made under glass by plants that have been forced, whether retarded or non-retarded, being too weak to afford good blooms.

PHRYNIUM VAREGATUM is treated somewhat differently to the ordinary run of plants. Here, it is given a thorough rest similar to cannas. At this season (March) the fleshy rhizomes are shaken out of the soil and potted, or they are placed in pans, according to the uses to which the plants are to be put, placing them in the stove. They soon begin to grow, and should be afforded abundance of light, in order to bring out the leaf tint.

OVER-LARGE TREE FERNS: Sink their roots into the floor of the house if you can, and build a wall of bricks without mortar around the stems a foot distant from them to let air reach them, and keep off any pressure from the earth. If this cannot be done, ring the stems, and keep a quantity of sphagnum-moss bound round them, and maintain this and the stem in a moist state till roots in quantity push forth, when the old-rooted butt ends may be severed, and the plants tubbed or potted.

IRRITATING PROPERTIES OF PRIMULA OBCONICA: There is a note in Knowledge of Feb. 1, 1901, p. 32, regarding the irritation that Primula obconica sometimes produces. It runs thus: "A piece from the base of the leaf-stalk applied to the wrist by an elastic band for two hours produced acute irritation, with blisters and swelling of the arm. Herr Nestler shows that it is the yellowish-green matter in the glandular hairs which possesses the poisonous properties."

DAHLIA CUTTINGS ROOTING: You should take slips with a heel, not hollow shoots made like ordinary cuttings, as these seldom can be got to strike. Put each singly into thumb pots filled with sandy loam coated with sand, and plunge in bottom-heat of 80 degrees; keep close and shade from bright sunshine. If in a frame, leave a $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch opening all night at the back of the sash. In a propagating house no ventilation may be necessary, unless the cuttings are placed in a close case.

DENDROBIUM NOBILE: The usual practice is to retain the pseudo-bulbs that have flowered for two or three years, and then remove them. Those gardeners who have very warm houses may cut off after flowering all the pseudo-bulbs of whatever age at the level of the compost, and force a plant to make entirely new pseudo-bulbs, of which most of the stronger ones will flower abundantly the next year. Under ordinary conditions the former is the better practice.

ANISAL DIANTHUS: We have received from Herr Ernst Benary, Erfurt, a large and handsome colored plate showing what are familiarly known as "single and double pinks." There is a fine variety here; some are white, others pink, red, crimson, and there is a nearly black-maroon blossom; yet others, again, showing these same colors as streaks or flakes, or edges on a white ground. The picture suggests that our gardeners might do worse this season than spare a bed or border for a display of these fine and much varied annual diantus.

CHLOROSIS IN PLANTS: Recent researches by Dr. Roux confirm the notion that the yellow condition of the leaves known as chlorosis is due to some deficiency in the chemical constituents of the soil. The liquid absorbed by the roots has an excess of lime, and a deficiency of potash and phosphorus. The consequence is a stoppage of the work done in the leaves, and of transpiration ending in the degeneration and death of the cells from starvation.

CINERARIA-LEAVES INJURED: The work of the larvæ of a fly—Phytomyza nigricornis. Nip the larvæ between the thumb-nail and the finger, or take them out of the leaves with an awl or a needle, if there are but few of them, badly infested leaves being collected and burnt. No substance can be applied to the leaves to destroy the grubs that will not destroy the former as well. Quassa-water and soft-soap made according to the usual formula might render the leaves distasteful to the fly, but as she does not feed upon them it is not certain that it would deter the deposition of eggs.

I SHOULD like to mention my experience with the Rose Kaiserin Augusta Victoria, and to ask whether it is a matter of common experience. It is this, viz., that the buds, when picked in a very firm and unopening form, open out into a full flower in a way very unusual, if not unknown, with most roses. I picked out of doors a bud about half an inch or less in length, and less than a quarter of an inch in largest diameter, and after three or four days in water it opened out into a full blown and well formed flower, though showing a little center.

GODETIA: It may interest your readers to hear of the wonderful keeping properties of godetia. I plucked a large branch of rose colored godetia in the first week of October, and have it still (February). It was placed in tall jars of water, the water changed every week. There has rarely been a fire in the room it is in, although there has been frost several times. Every flower bud has come out, and as the first flowers slowly faded, after many weeks, they were picked off. There are still eight blossoms of a pale rose hue, looking as fresh as if plucked last week. Two pots of the same, potted rather later, and kept in the house, did fairly well till the end of the year.

BEGONIA GLOIRE DE LORRAINE: In our conservatory there are at the present time (Dec. 27) twenty-four large plants of this showy variety, which were raised from buds, with a leaf attached, last April, and treated like cuttings of verbenas. The plants are now growing in 6-inch pots, and present masses of flowers, measuring 18 inches in diameter. I examined the plants last week for seed-bearing blossoms, and found no seed-than seventeen of these, which I fertilized with pollen taken from other varieties of begonias. These occur almost entirely at the ends of the racemes, and are usually the last of the cluster.

GARDENIAS FAILING TO FLOWER AND DYING OFF: The plant sent had roots that were thoroughly infested with ear-worms. The creatures are imported with the soil, and increase prodigiously under the favorable conditions found in a warm plant house. We are unaware of any remedy that will kill them, that will not likewise kill the plants. One efficient safeguard is to stack the soil two years before using it, keeping the stack meanwhile quite free from herbage, a sort of treatment that kills by starvation. Small quantities of soil might be rendered free of them by pouring boiling water over it, or by desiccation (not charring) on sheets of iron over a fire.

PRUNING ORCHIDS: You must be very careful about following the instructions given by your friends, who advise you to cut off orchid bulbs after they have done flowering. Pruning in a reasonable manner is beneficial, but to begin with, you had better confine your practice to the cutting away of damaged portions, or any of the small pseudo-bulbs which you know to be useless. In most collections useless bulbs are left far too long on the plants. They have to be supported by the forward and actively growing part of the plant, the leading flowering growth suffering in consequence. In the case of dendrobiums, such as D. noble, you can cut the portions removed into lengths and place them like cuttings in an orchid pan, and young plants will result.

GREENHOUSE VENTILATORS IN THE FRONT: Plants kept in a house having ventilation at the top only cannot be so well grown as where there is front ventilation likewise. The latter is very necessary in the summer months; and, on the whole, we prefer the air to be admitted below the staging, and the hot water pipes so arranged that when necessary the air may impinge on the heated pipes on entering the house. The front ventilation needs careful management in cold, bright weather, or the plants will be chilled, and thus enfeebled they fall a prey to aphids. It is generally advisable to reduce the quantity, or entirely shut out front air an hour or thereabouts before finally closing the upper sashes or air openings, and there are early bright days in the spring months when air should not be admitted at the front of a house.

THE "SOCIÉTÉ NATIONALE D'HORTICULTURE DE FRANCE": The last number of the Journal of the Society contains a brief epitome of the history of the Society from its foundation in 1826 to the present time. It has had many names, but its organization has continued practically intact during the numerous political vicissitudes to which it has been subjected, and its labors were not suspended even during the siege. When the Germans withdrew and the Commune was suppressed, the ravages of the war were rapidly repaired by the energy of the French horticulturists. The assistance rendered on that occasion by English horticulturists is also acknowledged. In 1860 the society took up its quarters in a building which it had purchased out of its funds, and where may be found meeting rooms, committee rooms, and a hall for large meetings and special exhibitions.

DETROIT.

The Detroit Florists' Club is distributing 5,000 young chrysanthemums to the pupils of the sixth and seventh grades in the public schools through the principals and teachers. These plants are to be grown by the children and shown at the exhibition Nov. 13 to 16 next. With each plant was given a printed slip containing directions for growing, as follows:

"You will receive the plant in a 2½-inch pot. Transplant it to a 4-inch pot at once. Place the pot in the garden in partial shade, sinking it in the earth up to the rim. Be careful to give the plant a good watering when first repotted. Keep it well watered all summer. When the buds come you must remove some, but be very careful to leave at least one bud on every branch.

"About the 5th of September dig up the pot and transfer the plant to a 6-inch pot. Take it indoors at night to protect from a frost. If you have no good earth, go to the nearest florist, who will supply you with it, and for any information you wish consult any of the florists whose names are attached."

The prizes offered to the school children are: A gold fountain pen to the pupil exhibiting the best and largest chrysanthemum plant from each public school in the city; $5 gold piece to the pupil exhibiting the best plant, selected from among all the prize winners; a $25 palm and jardiniere to the school making the largest and best exhibit, the number of pupils to be considered.

The children of florists will be excluded from competition. All children exhibiting plants will be entitled to free admission to the flower show.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—At the last meeting of the Florists' club there was an exhibition of roses and carnations. E. D. Clark, S. J. Reuter and F. Macrae received awards for roses, and the same gentlemen and J. Z. Dodge won awards for carnations. Z. R. Corp, an old time florist, died here recently.

OTTAWA, ONT.—At a recent meeting of the Horticultural Society it was announced that Lady Minto had given $100 to be awarded in prizes for the best kept gardens in the city where no gardener is kept, and a gold medal for the best garden where a gardener is employed.

DOVER, DEL.—W. W. and J. W. Pullen were, on May 16, each held in $2,000 bail by Acting United States Commissioner Geo. Hollis on the charge of using the mails to defraud. These are the parties who failed to fill orders for holly after receiving money for same.

TRENTON, N. Y.—C. A. Nicholson has purchased land upon which he will erect several greenhouses.

RALEIGH, N. C.—J. L. O'Quinn & Co. have added a fine new palm house.

THE FLORISTS' MANUAL.

After reading Mr. Wm. Scott's Manual, we wish to say that we consider it without equal as a book of reference for busy florists.

GEORGE M. KELLOGG.

Pleasant Hill, Mo.

Mr. Scott's superb work, "The Florists' Manual" was indeed worth waiting for. When compared with the amount of practical information it contains, the selling price, $5.00, seems a mere trifle.

H. WEBER & SONS.

It is the best book of the kind ever published. There is more in it than in any other book I have ever seen. I am delighted with it.

JOHN THORPE.

The copy of the "Florists' Manual" was duly received. I am very well pleased with same. The more I read it the better satisfied I am with it, and there are one or two articles in it that are each worth all you ask for the book, for everything is made so plain and all details are right to the point. I trust you may have a good and ready sale for the same.

M. S. WORDEN.

North Adams, Mass.

The only fault to be found with it is when you get reading it the midnight oil is liable to run low and you have to go on to get or reluctantly break off, either going to bed or first taking a look over the houses to see if the temperature falls with the Manual.

GEO. S. OSBORN.

We are in receipt of "The Florists' Manual," by Mr. Scott, and may say it is the right book for the florist, published at the right time. It is what we all need.

BOBBINK & ATKINS.

Rutherford, N. J.

Am much pleased with the Manual. It is just what I have been looking for. Something that we can understand, and enjoy reading.

JAS. HARTSHORNE.

No progressive florist, old or young, can afford to be without the Florists' Manual. The old florist needs it, for reference, to aid a defective memory, and the young florist wants it as a guide in this progressive era of the florists' business.

J. T. TEMPLE.

Davenport, Ia.

The Commissioners of Parks and Boulevards some time since directed that a library be started of such books as deal with subjects pertaining to park work, and to that end an order has been given for a number of books, among which is your "The Florists' Manual."

After reading this book carefully, I am greatly pleased and wish to congratulate you on the practical manner with which you have treated the subject.

The book is placed where it will be accessible to all of our greenhouse employes, where this board expects to reap a reward many times the cost of the book.

Respectfully yours, COMMISSIONERS OF PARKS AND BULEVARDS. R. J. COREYELL, Gen'l Supt.

Detroit, Mich.

The book is written for the working gardener, and Mr. Scott's reputation is so well secured that he will find among his gardening friends a host of genuine admirers. As a writer on practical gardening subjects, he is a recognized authority. Mr. Scott has long been an employer and knows what information young gardeners, or those with little experience, need, and he has his whole subject so perfectly at command that he can give the most desirable and essential information in the clearest language and with satisfactory brevity. The book is a distinct and important gain to the practical garden literature of this country, and it should be in the hands of every gardener, and everyone else engaged or interested in ornamental horticulture. The price of the book is $5, which seems somewhat high, but for useful information it is worth every cent of it.—Vick's Magazine.

Florists' Manual by William Scott. Publisher: Florists' Publishing Company, Chicago. Price, $5.

From advance sheets of the Florists' Manual, kindly sent us by the publishers, as well as from those which have appeared from time to time in the trade press, we have formed an idea of the general scope and usefulness of Mr. Scott's book, and we now hail with a great deal of satisfaction the work as a completed whole. Several handbooks of a more or less similar nature, dealing with commercial plant culture in America, or some portions of it rather, have been placed on the market; but the teachings which they convey have, as the years rolled by, become to a greater or lesser extent obsolete, owing to the continued mutability of methods, etc., so that the Manual containing, as it does, matter which is strictly up-to-date, and thoroughly practical, should meet with a ready acceptance among all engaged in the industry upon which it treats. It is called by Mr. Scott's instructors in matters horticultural, and is so well known to the trade to require any elaboration at our hands; suffice it to say that the said instructors have done a most careful handling of every subject dealt with, generally characterizing the text of the book now before us. Nearly 200 individual items are discussed, and, as regards plants, largely those of commercial value, the staples of the trade receiving greatest attention.—Florists' Exchange.

The Florists' Manual, by Wm. Scott. Florists' Publishing Co., Chicago. A reference book for commercial florists.

The author's first aim in preparing this work was to fill a long felt want among florists—a book describing the best plants commercially, with cultural advice founded on experience. Viewed in this light, it is a valuable and instructive work, very complete in its details. But it need not be confined to circulation among the florists and others commercially connected, although gardeners and amateurs are interested in it, as a work exactly fitting their requirements. Rather judge it through the author's own words, i. e., "If those who favor us with a perusal of its pages glean only one hint which may help them in their money. A work resulting from Mr. Scott's long and varied experience, "from selling a bunch of violets over the counter to planting a tree or seedling lawn or building a greenhouse," cannot but throw out many hints of value to any one interested in any line of horticulture or flower gardening. The comparatively small index confronting the reviewer at first is far from encouraging, but as the purpose of the author is more clearly brought to light, it is better appreciated. It shows the intention to treat of the most desirable and profitable lines of horticulture—a condensation which many will enjoy. Many interesting subjects are brought to headings, such as "Easter Plants," "Watering," "Decorations," "Potting," "Bedding Plants," etc. Not the least of value to the possessor of this book are the beautiful half-tone illustrations, numbering more than 100, and thoroughly illustrating the subjects treated. Critical persons may object to the interspersing of advertisements with the reading matter, though it is not made very obtrusive; yet it must be remembered that the work is designed for commercial purposes, and not strictly as a library book.—Mechan's Monthly.

THE FLORISTS' MANUAL
By WM. SCOTT

IS A BOOK OF 224 large pages (same size as those of the Florists' Review) and contains about 200 articles on commercial plants and cultural operations, each giving "the meat" only, from the personal experience of a thoroughly practical man who is in daily touch with each department of the business and who has that rare quality of being able to tell others what they want to know. The articles are arranged alphabetically, like those in an encyclopaedia, and in an instant one can turn to the subject upon which light is desired at the moment. The book is illustrated by over 200 fine half-tone engravings. It is and is a whole library on practical commercial floriculture in one volume. It is very handsomely and substantially bound in half leather, with specially designed title in gold.

The above mentioned book is one that you need in your business—One that you can't afford to be without.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

The beautifying of lawns and the spring bedding is now in full operation. Last year this branch of our industry received an impetus from the liberal premiums offered by our enterprising citizens for the most artistic flower beds and best kept lawns through the summer. These inducements were the means of bringing about an evolution in landscaping and arrangements of flower beds. The grounds of many of our fine residences were very noticeably improved with a great abundance of plants, harmonizing in color, with new and original designs not used in previous years.

We had plenty of rain conducive to vegetation, and our parks and gardens were gorgeous with fine blooms and foliage. There is no comparison between this spring and last. No rain to speak of in five weeks and the plants-men are consequently working under great difficulties. An increase in sales in this line is reported, with prices a shade lower than a year ago.

Business at the retail stores has been brisk for two weeks. The principal demand is for funeral work, and the market is pretty well cleaned up every day of all good material. Prices remain firm, with best Brides and Maids bringing $5 per 100. The carnation crop, we regret to say, is being neglected, and 100 blooms and 500 buds can be bought for $1. Paeonies have made their appearance and are selling well. The present indications are we will have a good Decoration Day trade. Very few designs or emblems are used, the call being mostly for cut flowers and plants. If trade is equal to that of a year ago there will be none too many cut flowers, as outside blooms, with few exceptions, are a failure this season.

Mr. and Mrs. James Hayes of Topeka, Kan., looking well and prosperous, were visitors here last week. H. J. M.

CLARKSVILLE, TENN.—A heavy hail storm on May 24 riddled the greenhouses of Mr. James Morton, doing considerable damage to plants in the houses as well as breaking a lot of glass. The loss through broken glass is estimated at $750 and that on plants at $250. Mr. Morton did not carry any hail insurance. He had not lost so much as a single light of glass from hail before during his seventeen years' experience here. Fortunately the weather was not cold or the loss in plants through freezing would have been heavy.

HIAWATHA, KANS.—J. W. Margrave & Co. lost more than half of their glass through a destructive hail storm last week. Fortunately but little damage was done to the stock in the houses. They carried insurance in the Hail Association, but the present high price of glass will make the insurance come considerably short of covering the loss.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—A meeting of the New Orleans Horticultural Society was held May 16 to complete arrangements for the chrysanthemum show to be held next November. Several additional special prizes were reported.

STERLING, ILL.—J. S. Swartley will this summer tear down one of his old greenhouses and will build a new one 50x25, which will contain 1,450 square feet of glass.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

Trade conditions here during the last three weeks have been fair. Real good stock of roses and carnations is becoming scarcer every day; the demand for such has been quite brisk ever since Easter, and from present indications seems likely to continue so.

In this section we are not troubled with those excessively warm nights so prevalent around Chicago, and, consequently, our stock does not deteriorate so early in the summer. The cut of roses and carnations at present is exceptionally good, and the growers have no trouble in cleaning out every day.

The sale of bedding stock, baskets and window boxes bids fair to outlive all previous years. Rose planting is in full swing and will be all finished by the middle of June. Carnations in the field are looking well. The copious rains of the last ten days and nice cool nights are doing wonders with them. I have seldom seen better looking stock at this season.

The Dunkley Floral Co. are contemplating remodeling their carnation houses.

George Taylor of Portage street, who has been in Borgess hospital suffering from blood poisoning, has sold his greenhouses, stock and good will to G. Van Bochove & Bro. George is the pioneer florist of this city.

The Van Bochove Bros. have nearly finished their new structure, which will be planted to carnations of the highest grade varieties at an early date.

RIBES.

ADRIAN, MICH.

About 8:30 in the evening of May 23 the most severe storm in years passed over Adrian, rain and hail falling in torrents for about twenty minutes, causing much damage to small fruits and garden truck. The greenhouses escaped with some broken glass, and the hail-stones still lay packed in the gutters at noon on the 24th.

The worst loss in the city is with market gardeners and fruit growers, gooseberries, currants and raspberries being literally stripped from the bushes in many cases. It is impossible to estimate the damage done to gardens in this city.

W. W.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.—The great floral pageant on May 9, during the visit of President McKinley, put completely in the shade any previous feast of flowers. The city went flower mad, and the blossoms were everywhere. The floral floats and decorated vehicles formed a long procession and they were interspersed with many original features, such, for instance, as the great Chinese dragon, whose long, snake-like body was supported by several score of Celestials.

ROCK ISLAND, ILL.—The new firm of Meyer & Behring will start with two houses, as that is all they will be able to get ready this season. Mr. Meyer, who has been a resident of Rock Island for the past six years, will handle the business department, while Mr. Behring, who was formerly of Richmond, Ind., will have charge of the growing.

SAULT STE. MARIE, MICH.—W. F. Webster, of Negaunee, has bought land here upon which he will build greenhouses and engage in the business.

THE FLORISTS' MANUAL.
A Reference Book for Commercial Florists

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Stock Plants.

There are some plants that to perpetuate your stock are better kept in pots and with some it is not only better, but essential, and before you are sold out you should reserve a few plants of each. The lemon verbena is one. Lantana is another, and the heliotrope should also be kept in pots, as they do not propagate from the cuttings taken from outside. We shift young plants of these into 4 or 5-inch pots and plunge them out in a frame.

I suppose you still grow that useful Christmas flower, the sweet stevia. The only trouble with it is that it is not profitable, yet you cannot do without it, and it matters not how much we have of it, there is never enough. You should have small plants of it now propagated in March, and they must be planted out in the open ground, growing them two feet each way. It should not be highly enriched ground, for the stevia is a rank grower. It is the only one of the stevias or eupatoriums that is worth growing.

Primroses.

If you have not sown primulas for next winter's flowering you should do so at once. Cover the seed very lightly with sifted leaf mold and keep moist. Keep them constantly shaded till the plants are up, and look out for slugs, for young primroses are a dainty dish for these nocturnal enemies.

Azaleas.

With us it is time now to get our azaleas plunged into a frame or the open ground. They should be in the broad sun, never behind a wall, or worse yet, under a tree. They grow a great deal during the summer and should not be crowded for several reasons. You want to get at them on all sides with the hose and they need daylight and air between them. In the hottest weather we have to water them twice a day and give them plenty of syringing.

The finest azaleas we have had for the past three or four years have been those that were unsold in the spring and were carried over for another season. Some of the varieties, in fact, do not turn out well the first season, but make splendid plants if carefully treated during the summer. Don't fail either to plunge them in the ground or thoroughly surround the pots with spent hops, tan bark or some such material. Another plan is, plant them out for the summer months and they do very well this way if you have a good, deep, friable soil, but I like growing them better in pots.

Poinsettias.

This is a good time to propagate the poinsettias, in fact, any time on till the first of September. They should not be long shoots; three joints long is enough. They root very readily, but you must keep them constantly moist. Water the sand twice a day and when potted off keep them shaded and moist till they get a start in the pots. After that they grow like weeds, but must have the lightest and brightest house you have.

Please remember when shifting to be careful not to disturb the roots. When in active growth poinsettias do not like it and if their roots are disturbed after October 1st it is fatal to the foliage. If you want very large bracts you can produce them best by planting them on a bench in 6 or 8 inches of good soil, but we grow them all in pots. The pans have of late years been most profitable, and for this purpose the cuttings that are taken off the old plants at the end of August are most suitable.

Chrysanthemums.

We never get a chance to plant out our chrysanthemums till the bedding plant season is over, which is toward the end of this month, and many are planted in July and give us a most satisfactory crop. So you can still put in all the cuttings you can get. We used to fail on many num cuttings in the hot weather of June simply because we did not keep them soaked sufficiently. Keep them planting that will save you space and annoyance in the fall. Begin at the end of a bench or occupy all of one bench or one house with the early varieties; the same with the mid-season, and same again with the late varieties; then you are cut clean off a bench and can clean off the whole space for lilies or other things that need the space.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

DRACAENA INDIVISA.

We present herewith an engraving we have reproduced from the Gardeners' Chronicle showing a fine specimen of Cordylina (Dracaena) indivisa in flower. The specimen illustrated was in the garden of Dr. Ramsay at Forquay and the Chronicle notes that both this species and C. australis are hardy in the southwestern counties of England and the Scilly Islands.

SIDE ISSUES.

The specialist in our business is troubled with fewer details in regard to his stock than is his less fortunate brother who finds it necessary to grow a general line of plants and flowers in order to accommodate his retail trade. But there is also the possibility of failure on the part of the specialist from some unforeseen contingency, and in that case the general grower has the opportunity to comfort himself by quoting that old adage about carrying all of his eggs in one basket.

The testing of novelties is one of the things in which both the specialist and saturated and they will root as well as in February.

Four inches of good heavy loam will grow flowers of the best quality. If you grow two or three flowers to a plant then eight inches apart is about right. We prefer a stem to every flower and plant six inches between rows and five inches between plants. A few days after planting every bit of shading that you may have had on the glass for other plants should come off. All the air you can give, but the broadest light, is needed. There is one thing to be observed in the retail grower are interested, for each is on the lookout for something that will be an advance on the present stock, though the purchase of novelties does seem to be akin to that of lottery tickets, the prizes being few and far between.

Nevertheless there would be but little advance made in our business were it not for those enthusiastic growers who are willing to risk a little space each season in the testing of some novelties, or for the purpose of doing some hybridizing or otherwise improving existing varieties. The showy cinerarias, the beautiful Chinese primroses, the extraordinary nignonette of Daillouze or May, and such advances in the carnation world as the Lawson and Prosperity are not the result of chance, but are due to patient and painstaking effort on the part of their growers and originators.

Such labor is not lacking in interest and sometimes is productive of capital, too. Of course there will be disappointments in the various attempts that may be made, just as there was in the first experience of the writer as a hybridist. This occurred many moons since, when it seemed to the youthful mind that there was a crying need for a variegated abutilon with white flowers, and various crosses were made with this in view, the resulting seed pods being carefully guarded and the seeds sown as soon as termed Cordylone australis) and is one of the easiest plants to manage and also one of the most enduring. It is also useful as a window plant, and for decorating, while a large specimen is a most attractive object when planted out or plunged on the lawn.

Seeds of this plant should have been sown in the fall or during the winter and the seedlings either pricked out into flats or potted into small pots as soon as they were large enough to be conveniently handled, and should then have reached size enough to be planted out in the open ground about June 1. This method gives stouter and stronger plants in one season than may be had by keeping them in pots and under glass throughout the season.

Many variations are liable to appear in a lot of seedlings of the cordylone, and edging plant around a bed of taller grasses. This plant is of quite bushy habit and throws up a large number of short canes from the underground stems, this habit making its propagation quite easy by means of division.

Other variegated plants that are frequently useful for the sake of variety are Rohdea japonica variegata, a tough leaved plant of which Japanese gardeners are very fond; Ophiopogon Jaburan var., a dense growing, striped leaved plant that also produces a number of spikes of small purple flowers, and Antiericum vittatum variegatum, the latter being much the most common of the three. All of these are cool house plants, and may be kept in good condition during the winter in a night temperature of 45 degrees.

Ivies are favorite house plants in many localities, and while the ordinary English they were ripe. The seedlings came up freely, and numbered some hundreds, but there were but two in the lot that had variegated foliage and the flowers of these were not the right color and were way below par in size. But these little reverses are frequently met with in the field of experiment, and ought not to deter any enthusiast from continuing his investigations.

And these reminiscences may perhaps be pardoned on the ground that they, too, are decidedly side issues, although it was not intended in the beginning to give this article such a direction, the intention being rather to offer a suggestion or two regarding some useful plants that may be termed side issues in the preparation for future business.

There are a variety of uses to which one may put Draecena indivisa, that very well-known narrow leaved species that is so often seen as a center plant in vases (and which is now correctly among them is sometimes found that variegated form known as C. Doucettii, a very pretty plant and one that has never become common.

One of the bamboos, Arundinaria japonica, also known as Bambusa Metake, has been spoken of as a useful plant for decorating, having been used for this purpose perhaps more frequently in Europe than in our own country, but when used in this way the plants should be in a well hardened condition and also should not be permitted to suffer from lack of water, for the foliage of a grass, to which family the bamboos belong, will not stand much drought. This very graceful plant is also valuable for outdoor planting, being quite hardy in the vicinity of Philadelphia, and some seasons almost evergreen.

Another of the bamboos, A. Fortunei, is a handsomely variegated plant of quite dwarf growth and may be used to advantage in filling porch boxes or as an ivy is all that is necessary in some places, yet there are others in which some variation from the ordinary stock may be appreciated. Where this latter remark applies it might be worth while to try a few sorts that are less common, and among the broad-leaved ivies, Hedera algeriensis and H. poetica can be safely recommended, both these varieties having large and handsome leaves and being vigorous growers. Two small leaved ivies that are distinct and pretty being found in H. Donerailensis and H. digitata, both of which are acceptable window plants.

Any of these ivies may be readily propagated during the latter part of the summer by means of cuttings two or three joints in length, the cuttings being planted in flats containing sand or sandy soil, kept moist and placed in a sheltered frame, preferably on the north side of a building. When rooted the cuttings may be planted in flats of good soil and allowed to remain in the flats until the following spring, when they may be planted out in the open ground at about the same time as carnations, well cultivated during the season, and in the fall should be lifted and potted into 5-inch or 6-inch pots, according to size, neatly staked up and tied, and if well done will soon attract the attention of customers.

And from the fact that ivies generally are shade-loving plants it is not so difficult to find a place for some of them in the fall, for they will flourish under the edge of a bench or stored among other plants, though in common with even the hardiest of plants a little attention will be repaid by better results.

GREENHOUSE GRAPES.

R. S. C. has a grapy in which the vines don't break good. Boiler is too small, so he has to freeze the vines in winter. Also has a vine of Barbarossa three years old that does not fruit though growing strongly.

The fact that the vines get frozen should not militate against their breaking properly if they are handled right. After the wood is ripe the vines should be pruned and laid down and covered with mats or leaves, or anything that will keep off the sun. It is always understood that it is not the freezing of a plant that causes trouble but the alternate freezing and thawing. We have been troubled here by young vines breaking irregularly that never were frozen, and I have seen the same thing at other places.

What is the cause of it no one seems definitely able to state. The trouble is only on the last year's wood from which the bud at the base of the past year's shoot refuses to break freely. When the wood is two years old and has formed a spur it breaks freely enough.

I take it the vines of R. S. C. are all young since he speaks of his 3-year-old Barbarossa. As his vines get older he will find the trouble will cease. One man claimed it all arose from the sulphuric acid that had been used to dissolve the bone having an injurious effect on the roots, but I have seen it in a house where no bone whatever had been used in the compost.

The second query as to why the vine of Barbarossa does not fruit is because this variety is one of the most uncertain of all the varieties grown to fruit properly. When it does fruit it will probably throw an enormous bunch. I have never seen more than three or four bunches on a vine at once. It is only a third-rate grape as regards flavor, but of course the enormous bunches make it popular in some quarters. The experts tell us that the proper name of this variety is Gros Guillaume, and that the true Barbarossa is a red grape.

THE SAN FRANCISCO SHOW.

We present in this issue two engravings from photographs of displays at the San Francisco exhibition, which was fully reported in our issue of May 23. They indicate that the florists of the Pacific coast are able to show first-class stock in cut flowers as well as in plants. It must have been a very instructive as well as interesting exhibition.

CHRYSANTHEMUM NOTES.

The cuttings for use as single stem plants in 6-inch pots should now be rooted. The classes for this particular kind of plants always make an exceptionally good feature at the fall exhibitions if the plants have been well grown. As soon as they are rooted pot up into 2 1/2-inch pots, and from that to the flowering size, 6-inch. The chief points to observe are not to let the young plants get pot bound, and never let them get dried out in the pots. If they are allowed to get dry a few times the wood will get hard and the bottom foliage will die off, leaving several inches of bare stem visible, while the ideal single stem pot plant should have foliage from the pot right up to the flower.

Dwarf sturdy varieties are the best to use for this purpose, Robinson being the universal favorite. Other good varieties are Sunderbruch, Morel (if you can get it good), Appleton, Wedding, Merza, Bonaffon, Nellie Pockett and Mrs. Barkley. Almost any variety will do well for this purpose, in fact, providing said variety has a compact habit. A good place to grow these plants after their final potting is in a sheltered position outside, where they will be protected from violent storms and where they could be plunged in a bed of coal ashes to keep the roots cool and moist.

In going over your plants nowadays you will occasionally notice on the under side of the leaves a small circular patch of tiny yellow eggs. They are the eggs of butterflies, and if not removed will soon hatch out an assortment of caterpillars whose appetite can only be equalled by a Weary Willie after a six days' fast. July and August are the worst months for caterpillars but strag-glets will be found through the greater part of the season. WALTER BENT

MEMORIAL TREES.

In the Washington Star of May 25 appears an interesting illustrated article on the trees planted at the national capital by or in memory of famous men. Mr. W. R. Smith, superintendent of trell said, "If your friend, Mr. Bingham, will withdraw the force bill and pass the Crittenden resolutions, I will guarantee that Georgia will not go out of the Union."

"Mr. Bingham said: 'I will do what I can about the business.' Subsequently he said: 'Things have gone too far to be controlled by any one man. It was because of this little episode that I asked luxuriantly in vases and hanging baskets when supplied with proper moisture, and it will also grow very nicely indeed on rock work. We planted it last season in the full sun. I have come to the conclusion that if you start with strong, healthy stock of russelias you can grow it and keep it as easily as you can a geranium or coleus or any other plant of that character.

IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATIONS.

The National League of Improvement Associations will hold its annual convention in Buffalo Aug. 12 to 15 next. The sessions of the first three days will be held in the banquet hall of the City Convention Home, Buffalo, N. Y. The last day's session will be at Lake Chautauque, N. Y.

There will be no day sessions of the convention on Monday. The time will be devoted to mutual acquaintance and to visits to the Pan-American Exposition and other points of interest in Buffalo. The chief event of the evening session will be an illustrated lecture by Prof. Charles Zueblin, of the University of Chicago, a leading authority on the public beauty movement, and one of the best speakers in the country.

On Tuesday the morning session will be devoted to organization, to reports of affiliated associations, and to brief addresses on the general topic, "What We Have Done and How We Did It." The afternoon session will be devoted to thirty-minute papers on the various phases of improvement work. Each of these papers will be prepared by an expert, and all topics discussed will be of vital interest. Among the subjects already arranged for may be mentioned "The Work of the Cleveland Home Gardening Association," by W. H. Monlton, secretary industrial committee Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, and "The Influence of Neighborhood Improvement Associations in the Embellishment of Cities," by Charles M. Loring, ex-president American Park and Outdoor Art Association. In the evening there will be an illustrated address by Miss Mira Loyd Dock, of Harrisburg, Pa.

The morning session of Wednesday will be devoted to the report of the executive board of the league, the election of officers for the ensuing year, the formulation of plans for further work, and to general business. In the afternoon the delegates will visit the Pan-American Exposition and some of the parks of Buffalo, under the escort of committees appointed by the florists of the city, the board of park commissioners and local improvement associations. At the evening session there will be another illustrated lecture.

The delegates will go to Lake Chautauque on the morning of Thursday. It is planned to have a "School of Methods" on topics essentially allied to educational work. At 4 o'clock in the after-the Botanic Garden, related to the reporter the following story regarding the Crittenden oak:

"This oak was planted by that great statesman, John J. Crittenden of Kentucky, to commemorate his grand but unsuccessful efforts for peace between the north and south. My close personal relations with Mr. Crittenden and his favorite colleague, Mr. Robert Mallory, prompted me to ask them to bring from Kentucky the largest acorns they could find to plant in the garden. Mr. Crittenden planted one of the acorns here, the place in the garden being selected on account of an incident which I will tell you. Representative Gartrell, a friendly colleague of Alexander Stephens of Georgia, and Representative John A. Bingham of Ohio, one of the leaders in the republican party, met by accident in the garden. The three of us walked eastward toward the Capitol, and as we came near this gate, and I being in the middle, I facetiously offered myself as a mediator between the sections. Mr. Gar-

Mr. Crittenden to plant one of the Kentucky acorns here. That was forty years ago."

THE RUSSELLIA.

In reply to Subscriber's request for information regarding the growing of russelia, we find this plant so easy to grow that we take no especial pains with it. The young wood roots as easy as a coleus in almost any temperature above 55 degrees. The plants grow luxuriantly in any of our houses wherever the temperature runs above 55 at night. We have carried quite a lot of the stock in our carnation houses and it continues to grow thrifty, but not quite so fast as in the warmer houses.

Young plants set out in the fields with geraniums and cultivated in the same manner, grow splendidly the entire summer, making large strong clumps which bloom freely, throwing spikes two to three feet in length. There is apparently no skill required in growing it; it grows noon Prof. Charles Zueblin will deliver a lecture, and in the evening Mr. Edwin L. Shuey will present an illustrated address.

Mr. D. J. Thomas, Springfield, Ohio, is corresponding secretary of the League.

A TABLE DECORATION.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph of a dinner table decoration arranged by Walter Kreitling & Co., Chicago, for a dinner tendered to the French ambassador at the Chicago Club during his recent visit to the city. We mentioned it in our Chicago notes at the time.

There were thirty-six covers and as will be seen the table was in the form of a square. The electric lights that studded the inner edge of the table were alternately red and white and in the central square was a frame work that sloped gradually down to the fountain in the center. This framework was covered with hardy fern fronds and the edge of the basin of the fountain was defined by a huge circle of yellow variegated parrot tulips. At each corner of the inner square was laid a flag of red and white carnations and blue corn flowers, two American and two French. Between these were placed loose bunches of red peonies. On the tables was a tracery of Sprenger and apple blossoms.

The huge canopy over the table was filled solidly with lilac, white and purple mixed, and the air was heavy with the fragrance. The price of the decoration was $200. The photograph was taken the morning after the banquet which will explain any raggedness in the appearance of any of the details.

A GOOD DRUMMER.

The REVIEW is a good drummer. It sells plants quicker than any other trade paper we have in the country.—C. LAWITZEN, Rhinebeck, N. Y.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Chronicle.

CHRYSANTHEMUM RUST: In a paper read before the French Society of Chrysanthemum Growers, and published in their journal for February of the present year, M. Thiriat observes that his plants raised from cuttings in April are only slightly attacked with rust, while those plants raised from cuttings struck in January and February are the most severely attacked. He considers that preventive measures are less efficacious than those which tend to increase the health and vigor of the plants. Plenty of air and abundance of sunlight are essentials. M. Chantrier recommends in the same publication the application of a solution of potassium pentasulphide (liver of sulphur), which checks but does not cure the disease. The quantity used is 300 grammes to 100 litres of water.

BEGONIA GLOIRE DE LORRAINE: After the plants have ceased to bloom and have been rested for a short time by lessening the quantity of water afforded, and keeping them slightly cooler, cut them down and place in the stove, when in a short space of time suckers will be thrown up. Cuttings of the strongest of these should be taken and struck in small pots in a steady bottom heat of 80 degrees. When rooted keep in the stove near the glass without shade, and repeat when necessary. Potting materials may consist of peat and turfy loam in equal proportions, with a good deal of sand. Good drainage is requisite for this and all other species. As the weather gets warmer the plants may be transferred to a heated pit, and in the warmest summer months accorded intermediate house treatment. The largest sized pot admissible is an 8-inch, but very nice plants may be grown in 4 and 6-inch pots. The plant will bear liquid manure once a week while growing.

CULTURE OF PALMS: Palms for the decoration of the dinner table and of apartments should be of moderate or small sizes, and necessarily the pots should be as small as is consistent with the plants being in a presentable condition. When the plants are grown in very small pots, manurial aids should be frequently afforded, and one of these good to use is clear soot water. Sulphate of iron in powder, at the rate of a small teaspoonful to a 10-inch pot, and washed in with water, gives a healthy color to the leaves. When plants have been forced upwards by strong roots, as is often the case with Latania borbonica, repotting becomes a necessity. The new pots should be sufficiently deep to allow the surface of the ball of the plant to come an inch or more below the rims of the pots. Mutilation of the roots is not recommended as a means of attaining this object.

HELIANTHEMUM "JUBILEE": Among the many forms of Helianthemum variable, none of the varieties with double flowers is equal to that known as H. venustum, fl. pl., but for some years back sent out as H. mutabile, fl. pl., with the exception of that now referred to under the name of H. Jubilee. The double flowered crimson colored variety, which should have some special name given it to distinguish it from other double flowered forms of the same color, has the merit of long blooming, and of showing its blooms well above the foliage. They are quite upright in habit of growth, and effective in the rock garden for a long season. There are few persons who see this variety without desiring to possess it. It is so greatly superior to the ordinary double flowered forms of H. variable that a few companions of different colors are much to be wished for. Until lately we have not had such, but a sport from the double crimson has now given us at least one other color—a good yellow. This sport occurred in the garden of Mr. P. H. Normand, who has propagated the sport, and named it "Jubilee."

LILACS IN POTS: Lilacs once forced into bloom should not be forced the next year, but grown on as described before for two years. In fact, except under very exceptional conditions of weather and situation, it is not possible to get lilacs to flower again so well as when first brought over from the continent. Assuming that no forcing has been practiced, but the plants (Continental) have flowered naturally in a greenhouse, let them be hardened off before anything else be done. Then, having chosen a spot about the middle of a south border, away from all shadow thrown by east and west walls, shake off some of the soil, and loosen the outer roots, and having some loamy soil and manure handy, proceed to plant them at 2 to 3 feet apart, putting the loam and manure immediately round the balls; apply water, and make firm. These plants need only to have the weaker shoots removed. Give to each a short stake, and a tie to keep them steady. Put no other plants between the rows, as there must be nothing to shade the soil and keep it cool. The main idea is to obtain short, stocky, well ripened shoots. The surface must be kept friable with the hoe, and never allowed to cake. Water up to the beginning of August may be afforded in hot weather occasionally; not later, or the wood will ripen imperfectly. In a hot summer you may get shoots well set with flower buds. Lilacs which have been forced should be hardened off, and similarly treated, except that the stronger shoots may be tipped. These plants would stand for two summers in the bed, and be lifted and potted in September or October of the second year, provided the show of flower buds gives hope of good returns. No harm results to a lilac bush if it flag considerably in hot weather—in fact, it seems to conduce to greater floriferousness and early ripening of the wood.

HARDY PLANTS.

The garden of hardy plants at Lincoln Park, Chicago, was so beautiful, even before any bloom of consequence had appeared, we felt it should be shared by the readers of the REVIEW so we had the accompanying photograph taken. But now that we have the picture in black and white we realize more than ever what a large part of the garden's beauty was due to the foliage color tones. The deep red brown of the peonies and the great variety of harmonizing tones of green in the other rapidly growing herbaceous plants, supplemented by the delightful greens of the young foliage on the trees and shrubs, created a most pleasing and deeply satisfying picture.

Some slight idea of the color contrasts may be had by a close examination of the picture, but so much must be left to the imagination that it is a disappointment as an illustration.

The peonies are now in bud, the German irises are beginning to bloom and the aquilegias are approaching their best estate. The wild geranium, several specimens of which have been in fine bloom, is now passing. Several masses of the native phloxes are still a sheet of flowers and the dodonaeas are about at their best. Scilla hyacinthoides still shows hundreds of spikes of white flowers and the Oriental poppies are ready to burst their buds.

Shrubs are late and the lilacs are now about at their best, as are also Lonicera tartarica and tartarica grandiflora. Spiraea Van Houttei is barely showing color yet. And curiously enough plants of this spiraea in Washington Park, in equally exposed situations, are already in nearly full bloom.

BOSTON.

Trade Conditions.

It seems to me that things consist more of a past, present and future just now than usually. Of course last week was a busy one and I think utilized more natural flowers than ever, one peculiarity being that hardly any artificial material was called for, and those who stocked up with it must have lost on their venture. I notice that some of the city florists must have been bitten slightly last year in this respect, as their windows did not make such a display in this line as formerly. Buyers began purchasing for Thursday as early as the previous Saturday. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday forenoon there was a big demand, even though the weather was against us, but Wednesday afternoon found all hands supplied, and on Thursday morning but little wholesale business was done. My prediction of plenty of material except roses was correct, and even roses were not needed late in the busy time.

A tremendous lot of plants were sold, not much being left in that line save a few pansies and daisies. Geraniums are called good property now. Also a peculiarity of last week was the presence of hundreds of first class Easter lilies much better in quality than is usual for the date.

Just at present there is more coming in than could be expected considering the weather and the fact that everything was quite closely cut for Memorial Day. There is also more demand than might be looked for, so that everything goes along very smoothly. What the future will bring forth is an open question; June weddings are an unknown quantity. Last June was not a heavy one, but the one preceding was good, and I think this one will be the same. I know of some good orders already located for work during the first week. But it looks to me as though pinks will become so plentiful that only the best will stand much show.

BUFFALO.

We hardly ever remember the week of Decoration Day being such a gloomy time. It was not the amount of rain that fell, but drizzle, drizzle continuously for five or six days, and the day itself was gloomy in the extreme. Yet I think business was up to the average, although the crowds that usually visit the cemeteries were not so visible. There appeared to be flowers enough to go round. The weather has much retarded the work of the plant man, and he deserves sympathy, for the people did not want them nor could we fill the orders during the wretched weather, but now let the sun shine for a few days and we will be just swamped.

It appears that at last we have the genuine Greek with us. Not the sort that was alluded to a few weeks ago, who had a counter in a department store, but a stall in the entrance of the Moon-ey-Brisbane building in the very center of the city and one of the first office buildings. Well, let them come. There is a wide difference of opinion about their influence, and if other cities can stand it I am sure we can.

The Pan-American is not filling the city to suffocation, yet there are many strangers here, and if the weather had been warm and pleasant the attendance would have more than exceeded expectations of the sanguine. It is cheerful to hear men from Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, as well as from the great cities of the east, all agree that the attendance in mid-summer will be enormous. We always thought so, and never more confidently than this moment.

I am afraid we did not see all the horticultural visitors for the past week, but we did see Mr. and Mrs. Groff of Simcoe, Ontario; Charles Vick and Mr. King, of Rochester, and President Patrick O'Mara, of New York. Mr. O'Mara helped to put good spirits into Julius Heinrich. Mr. Heinrich has worked hard to complete the fine exhibit of the Peter Henderson Company, but weather and circumstances have been against him. He will come out all right, and their plot will be a beauty spot when finished. Mr. Fotheringham, representing the F. R. Pierson Company, is also here, and he is more than delighted with horticulture at the Pan-Am. If I were to repeat all his pleasant utterances you would think they were said to please me, but they were not. He said as he stood in the midst of the rose garden and looked around, "This beats the World's Fair a hundredfold and is a credit to horticulture." W. S.

DENVER, COLO.

Decoration Day.

The demand for cut flowers and plants was on an average larger this Decoration Day than we have had before. Though lots of snowballs and iris (which were in perfection) were used, there was a good demand for the choicer flowers at a good price, roses running about 50 cents more a dozen than the usual prices, and consequently every one is happy.

Our weather out in this ordinarily very dry climate has taken quite a change and now seems very much like eastern weather, as we have had rain or cloudy days pretty nearly every day for quite a long time.

Some Fakes.

To show how much the florist can be disappointed at times, the Gallup Floral Company secured some seed of what was supposed to be our native columbine from a lady in the edge of the mountains, who claimed to have gathered them from the native plants, but when Mr. Lewis, of that firm, showed them to me today they were of any old kind but the Rocky Mt. Columbine, of which there was not one. He says he thinks he will go to the mountains himself and get his own seed.

And writing of fakes in our line of business, it calls to mind a scheme that was played on the Park Floral Company. Some one representing himself as Mr. Berry, of that firm, has been around among the Capitol Hill houses taking orders, much to the chagrin of the true Jno. Berry, especially when some customers jumped on him with both feet for having sold them worthless stock. The outcome of the matter is that now the employees of the firm have an official badge, on which is displayed the name and number of each employe and the firm has distributed thousands of price lists in which they call special attention to said swindle.

Various Notes.

Mr. Valentine, manager of the Park Floral Company, has returned from his eastern trip, going from here via Galveston to New York, to Buffalo, then through the lakes to Duluth and then home. He looks as if he thoroughly enjoyed his trip.

Mr. Phil Scott (who, by the way, is considered the best bowler in Denver) is to be married to Miss Simkins on June 4, and later in the season when business is not quite so brisk he and his wife intend to take in the exposition at Buffalo.

On May 24 the Denver Floral Club had one of their monthly socials, at which there was a good attendance, though it rained all the evening. The time was most pleasantly spent with cards and music and the latter was of such a fine character that the card players forgot their games. Our vice president John Satterthwaite, is just at home with the violin. T. R. S.

BALTIMORE.

The Weather.

The weather is considered a trite subject, but it is for all a very important one to the trade to which this journal is dedicated, and information and comparison from diverse sections of a common country with mutual interests at stake are not without interest and occasionally considerable profit. Here, for about two weeks preceding the date of this writing (June 3d) we have had an abnormally dull and rainy experience. The downfall has not been extreme, but the persistence of the drizzle and the continued clouds have made an uncomfortable May, and flowers, neither outside nor indoors, have been abundant. During the month rain fell on nineteen days, and the total precipitation was 3.67 inches.

The supply of flowers has not been excessive; indeed, neither roses nor carnations have been equal to the demand, except of poor stuff, which nobody wants and nobody will have if they can help themselves. Roses from outdoors are beginning to come in now, but they are very late, and the same may be said of peonies.

Decoration Day.

There is some divergence of opinion as to whether Decoration Day is not growing in importance here from a commercial standpoint. Some dealers report a much larger trade than usual, but this is attributable perhaps to the paucity of blooms of hardy shrubs which usually make up the bulk of floral decorations on the day. There seems, however, a growing tendency to enlarge the observance of the custom of decorating the graves not only of those who have served in army and navy, but of friends and relatives. The Spanish war seems to have revived the usage, which has not been so general for the past few years, and the fact that the day is a legal holiday will give renewed emphasis to this patriotic use of flowers, such as is seen in more northern localities. The Confederate Memorial Day is June 6th, but the effect of this on trade is scarcely perceptible.

Various Items.

Alexander Scott, manager of the Florists' Exchange, has been confined to his house for nearly two weeks by an attack of erysipelas, but he is again at his post. Theodore Eckhardt, who has been superintending the gardens and improvements of the grounds at the Springfield Insane Asylum, has resigned from that post and will go to Yokohama, Japan, where he will assume the position of general manager for the extensive house of L. Boehmer & Co., largely known as exporters of bulbs and Japan plants, seeds, etc. The work inaugurated by Mr. E. already began to show his skill and taste in that line.

Amongst recent visitors to this city were Wm. G. Bertermann, of Indianapolis, president of the American Carnation Society, and Mr. Buettner, of Chicago.

Benjamin Durfee, of the American Rose Co., of Washington, was seen here a few days ago. He reports trade as bustling there, the official observance of Decoration Day making things lively at the capital. He is as enthusiastic as ever over the merits of the Golden Gate rose, and especially of its white form.

George A. Black has had plans prepared for a modern establishment at Lutherville, where he will grow cut flowers on the property acquired by him. The old establishment will be dismantled and the material used in part in some of the smaller of the new houses, and the land leased or sold. R.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Decoration Day business in our city never amounts to much and what little was done this year was fully up to the expectations. The florists, though, who are located close to the cemeteries had all they could do and were kept bustling all day long. At the wholesale houses all hands were busy during the morning, and shipping orders the day before amounted to more than the local trade. The sale of dried stuff did not amount to much and fresh flowers had the call by long odds. Most of the stock called for was cheap outdoor stuff.

The supply of fancy stock in roses and carnations was limited. The supply of roses was hardly sufficient and much of the good stock was badly mildewed owing to the cool days and nights we have had the past week. Prices on really good stock ran from $4 to $6 per 100; seconds,

$2 and $3; the latter stuff was quite plentiful. Jacques sold well at $3 per 100.

Carnations were in full supply and all were sold out clean before noon at prices ranging from $1 to $1.50 per 100. A slight advance in price was noticeable when stock was good and this was especially so in colored varieties.

Paeonies were in great demand and sold well at $3 per 100; the supply was limited. Harrisii and callas, at $6 per 100, sold well, but only a few were to be had. Carniflowers, sweet peas and gladioli spikes sold well at regular prices. Cape Jasmines are now coming in in large lots and are selling at $1 per 100, but cheaper in 1,000 lots. Snitax at 15 cents per string, is having a good call just now.

Various Items.

The plantsmen at Union market report great sales of plants the day before Decoration Day, and now that the rush is over, they are taking things easy, as the season is about over and very little business will be done in that line from now on.

The commencements at the various schools will take place this month and will help the florists out a little. Charlie Kuehn, whom everybody knows, is quite a poet. This is his latest on Decoration Day:

"A florist stood on the burning deck,
On a certain warm occasion;
It was on the 30th day of May,
So he made a deck-oration."

Carew Sanders is still confined to his bed and from latest reports is still very sick.

Max Herzog and wife leave for Europe Wednesday, June 5, to be gone several months.

Thompson, Kennedy & Anderson, the horticultural builders, report that they have a very busy season before them.

Park Commissioner Ridgely will attend the annual meeting of the Park and Outdoor Art Association at Milwaukee, June 26 to 28.

The North Floral Co. report lots of G. A. R. work on Decoration Day. This, with plenty of funeral work, has made quite a busy month for them.

Theo. Miller on Delmar boulevard says that the planting season has been a good one with him; better, even, than last year. He will now rest up for a while and make the trip to Buffalo this summer.

Will Adels and F. H. Weber have matrimonial contracts on hand for this month. Both are young members of the Florists' Club and we wish them good luck.

Don't forget the club meeting next Thursday at 3 o'clock in the Belleville Commercial Club rooms.

Frank M. Ellis, one of our wholesale men, had the misfortune to lose his pocket book the past week, containing checks and post office orders, on which payment has been stopped.

Shaw's Garden was thrown open to the public last Sunday, June 2. Nearly 20,000 people passed through the gates. The garden is in fine shape this year and the visitors enjoyed themselves the entire day.

Prof. William Trelease of the Missouri Botanical Garden, is away on his usual summer vacation and will take in the Pan-American Exposition on his return home.

Fred C. Weber, state vice president, would like to hear from all the florists in the state who are not members of the S. A. F. O. H.

The St. Louis bowlers are taking great interest in watching the four teams in the Florists' League at Chicago and we are glad to see some of the old timers take hold and make some good scores. A match game between St. Louis and Chicago florists about now, or just before the convention, to see how we stand, would awaken interest.

Bowling.

The bowlers had a warm night of it Monday. The attendance was better than usual, nine being in attendance, and some fair bowling was done. The scores are as follows:

	1	2	3	4	Tot. Av.
Kuehn	201	128	192	...	521 174

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower market has been in great shape since the report of one week ago. Decoration Day saw an active demand and this week the call for fancy stock especially is surprising. The grower who has really fine roses or sweet peas has the glad hand extended to him now while the grower with good paeonies is greeted with open arms. This week's prices are about the same as last week; the buoyancy of the market has prevented sudden fluctuations, all grades seeming to move well. Choice Beauties are eagerly sought; $2 and $2.50 a doz. is the city price, while $3 is obtained for selected stock for shipping. Sweet peas are coming in from outside and are quickly snapped up at 50 to 75 cents per 100. The color is glorious now that we have bright weather at last. Paeonies usually depended upon at this time of commencements and weddings are late like everything else outdoors. P. officinalis is pretty nearly over and the other varieties need a little more sun; the result is there are not enough to go around. One commission man needed 1,000 on Monday and had much worry over getting that number, ordinarily an easy matter at this time. Eight dollars is the price for the cream, $5 and $6 for nice flowers. Carnations are selling well, $2 and $2.50 is the price for fancies, while ordinary varieties bring $1, more or less, according to quality.

Returning again to Decoration Day there was a strong demand for outside stuff, a bunch that would make a good show for a dollar. Snow balls at 60 and 75 cents a bunch went well, also spirea and other shrubby flowers. Most of the paeonies brought prices noted above but there were at least two dozen sold at $1.50 per doz.

Plants.

The dark weather kept cemetery work back and the florists who depend on that trade have hardly done as well as usual. They expect, however, to make it up later, as the work is pretty sure to be only delayed, not abandoned. It is probably as well the demand was a bit checked as nearly everything in a pot with a bloom on it was cleaned up on this day.

Despite the wet May the bedding plants are being moved rapidly. Nearly all choice stock is sold or engaged excepting here and there and then the grower generally knows where he can place it. Suburban retail prices on much of this stock are much too low. One dollar per doz. for geraniums from 4½-inch pots delivered and planted is the price asked by many of our out of town florists. It is their own product and they say they cannot get more. The stock is cheaply produced yet it can hardly be profitable. Nearly all of these retail growers are located on expensive properties and their bedding plants are an important if not the principal crop.

Crotons are in great demand. They go out of doors this week and next, and will add richness to the effects on many lawns and gardens.

The hardy rose business was never better for the florist than now. This is rather curious. For several years past the department stores, notably John Wanamaker, have done a thriving business in dormant roses at $1.25 per doz. These roses are good value when carefully handled but in a dry spring they often suffer for water and do not flourish. The popular tide has turned this season and the very spring when J. W.'s roses would have had a great chance they have been neglected for the pot grown stock of our own growers and we are reaping a good harvest. It is delightful to hear the brethren assure their customers that J. W.'s roses are not safe to buy.

Various Items.

Harry Faust, of Merion, has some fine Hydrangea Otaksa in 5-inch pots.

J. J. Habermehl & Sons had a fine lot of gladioli in colors in their window before Decoration Day. Whoever grew these flowers deserves great credit for his work.

W. H. Wanger, 17th and French streets, noticed an increased demand among school children for five cent plants to give the Grand Army Post on Decoration Day. He bought 3,000 of these little plants at 3 cents and sold them at 5 cents.

There is some rose Sunrise about town this week. It is a beautiful thing and should prove a great acquisition from all standpoints.

Centauria imperialis is selling well. More of our growers should take it up.

The commencement at the Young Ladies' School at Ogontz on Tuesday created a lively demand for flowers, especially colored roses.

The prona meeting of the Florists' Club was also an event of Tuesday. A good show was seen in the club rooms at Horticultural Hall that evening by the members present. PHIL.

BEGONIA GLOIRE DE LORRAINE.

We have reproduced the accompanying illustration from the Gardener's Chronicle, which says regarding it:

"The illustration well portrays the exceedingly decorative qualities of the winter flowering Begonia Gloire de Lorraine. A novelty only a few seasons ago, the variety has become so popular that it is now cultivated in almost every garden that possesses the necessary means. It is propagated by cuttings without difficulty on mild bottom-heat in a propagating frame. While the plants are growing they require an intermediate temperature, and should be kept close to the glass, that the growths may be strong and shrubby. When in bloom in the conservatory they make a beautiful effect, as may be seen in our illustration, reproduced from a photograph."

CHICAGO.

The Market.

All the wholesalers agree that it was a record breaking Decoration Day business and that such a brisk demand had never before been known for the occasion. Everything was completely cleaned up and not even scraps were left. Prices held stiffly up to quotations all through and the only regret is that some of the stock now coming in so abundantly was not in evidence last week, when orders had to be seriously cut for lack of it. The shortage in the supply of paeonies and the entire absence of Cape Jasmynes and other flowers of that class made life wearisome to the dealers who were buried under an avalanche of orders. This week a similar avalanche would be very welcome and there would be little necessity for cutting any orders.

Paeonies are now coming in freely and Cape Jasmine is arriving from the south in considerable quantities. There will be an abundance of both these flowers as well as standard stock for the school closings, or such of them as will use flowers this year. Locally this demand will be considerably interfered with by the order of the board of education forbidding the use of flowers at the graduating exercises of the public schools.

After Decoration Day the general demand kept up well the remainder of the week, but last Monday there was a sharp slackening which became more pronounced on Tuesday. At present there is a fair shipping demand, but aside from this the market is weak and as usual the poorer grades are getting very much the worst of it.

Tea roses are held at $4 to $5 for good shipping grades and some specially select as high as $6, while ordinary sells at from $3 down. The best Beauties are $3 a dozen and from that through the regular grades down to 75 cents. Good ordinary carnations are $1 to $1.50 and the fancy range from $2 to $3, but culls are sold at as low as 40 cents in clean up lots. In paeonies commons are quoted at $4 to $5 and fancy at $6 to $8. Some fine old reds brought $1 a dozen readily, but in the pinks there are many that are not up to the usual standard in quality.

One outside buyer who had a telegraphic order declined by three different houses last Wednesday, took a train to the city to pick up some stock himself, and after putting in the afternoon, departed with a few odds and ends that he would have probably kicked vigorously about had they been shipped to him. Before leaving he was forced to admit that when the dealers wired back that stock was not to be had it was no fairy tale.

Various Items.

Kennicott Bros. Co. had 4,600 dozen paeonies for Decoration Day, but could have sold twice that number. They were obliged to refuse about $1,500 worth of business.

Bassett & Washburn report shipping business as holding up finely and they are still badly rushed with orders.

McKellar & Winterson are receiving some extra fine long-stemmed white paeonies and plenty of Cape Jasmynes, which last they would have been overjoyed to have last week, but are not nearly so anxious for this week.

Wietor Bros. have already replanted twenty-two of their Beauty houses and still have sixteen left to cut from. They have also replanted eighteen of their houses of Brides and Maids.

A regular meeting of the Florists' Club will be held at the usual place tomorrow (Friday) evening. Action will probably be taken at this meeting regarding the proposed picnic.

The Geo. Wittbold Co. has a very large stock of latanias in all sizes and in extra good condition.

Head Gardener Stromback is bedding out his tender plants at Lincoln park. A new feature is a bed of fancy pelargoniums. Two beds of Azalea mollis have lately been making a gay display here. In the hardy garden the native phloxes have been making a brave show and the dodecatheons are now about at their best. The aquilegias and irises are now beginning to bloom. The paeonies are in bud and promise a great display this season, unless some accident intervenes.

Mr. Kanst has been making some radical changes in the space in front of the conservatory at Washington park. The drive is now the height of the mound at the west and those driving through have an excellent view of the bedding on the lower level between the drive and the conservatory. Most of the beds are already planted. The trees and shrubs in this and Jackson park are in fine condition.

Bowling.

In the fifth series of league games played last Tuesday evening the Growers gave the Wholesalers mildew and black spot in two games, while the Wholesalers disbanded the Growers in one game. The Retailers presented the Seedsmen with cel-worms, smut and weevils in the three games. John Degnan, of the Seedsmen, is putting up a good game, but needs support. F. Stollery captured one of the dollar prizes with a score of 202. The scores follow:

ST. PAUL.

Trade Conditions.

Spring trade has been decidedly good and every one in the business has been busy. Cut flowers have been in big demand, while bedding plants have sold exceedingly well. There has been a good cut of flowers, still not enough to meet all demands.

Memorial Day Trade.

Decoration Day trade was the best on record. Cut flowers were in great demand and owing to the absence of nearly all outside stock the supply was wholly insufficient. Lilacs were in bloom May 5, valleys May 15, snowballs May 20 and peonies are not yet open. Add to these shortages the lateness of the Cape Jasmine crop in the south and the inability to obtain anything but roses in carnations and valley, and you have the true condition of the market here for Memorial Day trade.

Grave decorations were extensive but not elaborate, loose flowers being employed more than made-up designs, though some of the latter were seen.

An immense business was done in the plant line, as nearly every one with a loved one underneath the sod decorated the grave or lot with plants. Vases and beds are numerous.

The Oakland Cemetery Association, of this city, own and operate a range of houses in which many thousands of bedding plants are grown annually. These are sold at low rates and lot owners buying from the association have plants watered during the summer free of charge. All others pay $1.50 for each bed or vase watered. As the Cemetery Association is exempt from taxation, the injustice to the florist is readily seen.

But to return to Decoration Day trade. The city demand for cut flowers was not heavy, but the increased demand from the country was enormous, and places this day as one of the best holidays in the year for the florists' business.

Fancy carnations, retailed at $1 per doz., a few choice Bradts and Lawsons bringing $1.50; ordinary stock, 50 to 75 cents. Roses, $1.50 to $2; Beauties, $3 to $5.

Trade Items.

June trade opens up very well, especially in the shipping line. The great call for commencements, weddings and funerals keeps down all surplus and finds a shortage nearly every night.

The growers are busy filling porch boxes, vases and beds and in planting out their own stock plants and preparing for another season's business.

L. L. May & Co. have received a large importation of palms and arancarias, which came through in first class condition. They find spring importations of palms much more satisfactory than fall, as they receive better plants and can give them the benefit of three months' growth during the hot weather in otherwise unused space. They have commenced repainting their houses, intending to give them a thorough cleaning inside and out.

The convention of doctors this week and of Woodmen next will undoubtedly give the business a little boom, though there is no great demand for flowers for their social or business sessions.

Robt. Brown, formerly foreman for L. L. May & Co., is now located at Oil City, Pa.

While it is a little to early to plan for the convention at Buffalo, I think the North Star state will be well represented. The florists here were never as prosperous as they are this season and prospects were never higher. X. Y. Z.

Decoration Day Trade.

Decoration Day trade demonstrated that the people will have flowers. There was a general scramble among the trade for the few flowers in sight. Anything and everything sold; even irises of the poorer grade, which were the only flowers in over supply, were finally cleaned up at fair figures, leaving the commission houses a blank. The long-distance telephone was ringing constantly, but the only answer was that you could do nothing for them.

Never before have flowers been quite so scarce for that day in this city, and we hope it will never be so again. It is a bad thing to be compelled to turn down orders, for there are always some customers who seem to be unable to realize that flowers are not manufactured and that the weather has something to do with the supply.

Various Items.

We have now the June weddings and commencements to look forward to, and with bright, sunny weather in sight everything looks well. Already there is an increased supply, but the demand is here also, and prices remain about the same as last stated.

Park Superintendent B. P. Critchell is to be complimented on the efficiency of his work this spring. The parks look better than I have ever seen them before. Garfield park, especially, deserves mention. By arranging the large palms, with which the city greenhouses are well stocked, throughout the park in artistic groups, burying the pots in the soil, a tropical effect is produced which is very pleasing, doubly so as this park is situated almost in the center of the city. Mr. Critchell says that cut worms have been doing some damage in the flower beds, but as yet it has been slight.

A thief has for some time been lifting articles of various kinds, including flowers and plants, from the greenhouses of George & Allan. After much trouble they have been able to locate most of the articles taken, but as yet the thief is at large. They now know who the party is and his capture will follow shortly.

Mr. J. A. Peterson will hold a public auction of plants at his Race street store on Saturday, and on Monday following he will sell out his fixtures and close up his retail business in the city.

The annual meeting and election of officers of the Cincinnati Florists' Society will be held Saturday evening, June 8, at the clubrooms. A full attendance is requested. C. J. OHMER.

EVANSVILLE, IND.—Julius Niednagel has bought the Carmody greenhouses, which he has leased for many years, and will move them to a new location. Wm. Blackman has removed to a new store at 402 Main street. He is adding three new houses to his greenhouse plant.

GREENSBURG, IND.—Hedges & Clark are building two new houses.

EASTON, PA.—The Keller greenhouses have been sold to F. L. Morgenstern.

EXCELSIOR, MINN.—A. Brackett has started in the business here.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IA.—J. F. Wilcox is building six new houses, each 26x200.

Under the heading, "Have you ever studied a perfect chrysanthemum," the Chicago Daily American moralizes as follows:

The chrysanthemum, imported from Japan, may be developed to almost any size and color, according to the attention of the gardener.

When you see at the top of a long stem one solitary chrysanthemum blooming in marvelous perfection, well developed on all sides, beautiful in color, containing in itself all the possible product of the plant, you see what intelligent control can do for one flower.

You also see what intelligent control can do for one human being.

The chrysanthemum left to itself is a spry, shrubby plant, producing a considerable number of small, uninteresting flowers.

These numerous flowers sap the strength of the plant and make it impossible for that plant to produce any flower of full development and perfect beauty.

The intelligent gardener, wishing to obtain a chrysanthemum of value, proceeds first of all to suppress all but the most promising bud on the plant. All the little buds which might have developed into indifferent chrysanthemums are picked off—murdered.

In their early budhood they are condemned to death, and only one bud is left to receive the accumulated energies of the stem. Hence the plant produces finally one splendid flower of real value, instead of a score of worthless, puny blossoms.

In the treatment of a chrysanthemum there is an important lesson for every man who wishes to amount to something in the world.

Like the chrysanthemum, which starts out with a great many buds, man is born here with a great many possibilities. Almost every man can do a little music, a little writing, a good deal of talking, some acting, some inventing, some mechanical work, and so on.

Every man who wishes to produce a result worth while must treat himself as the intelligent Japanese gardener treats the chrysanthemum plant. He must select among his various qualities the one quality worth preservation; he must select that development, that faculty which is his best, as the gardener selects the best bud on the plant.

Don't try to do a dozen things well. You can't succeed. You may possibly succeed in developing properly one of your buds, one of your talents. You can't develop them all. There is not in your being sufficient energy to provide actual success in more than one direction.

You may read of The Admirable Crichton who could do almost everything. But on closer investigation you will learn that everything that The Admirable Crichton could do was done better by some one else who devoted himself to that special thing.

You read that Michael Angelo was the greatest engineer, the greatest architect, the greatest artist of his day. But in the end he was really only a great artist. His architecture and art and engineering were developments of the same faculty.

Among the buds that grow on every human being there are several that should be taken off first of all. They never could amount to anything, and they could only hurt the useful buds.

A few of such buds are: Conceit, self-indulgence, drinking, smoking, gambling.

Pick off these buds at once, if you have the strength to get them off.

It is depressing to think of how many of the best men devote their strength to keeping the harmful buds alive.

The money, time and fond attention which men give to their vices, to the useless, harmful buds, would suffice to make them successful, and to produce at least one good result.

We invite young readers—and some old ones (it is never too late for a good move)—to select some of their buds for decapitation.

See if you can't rid yourselves of some of your useless ideas, ambitions or personal indulgences, and give to something worth while the energies scattered in many directions.

THE EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

There are now 49 agricultural experiment stations in the United States. The number of chemists employed in these stations is 157; the number of botanists is 50, and the number of entomologists is 42. Other branches of science also are represented at the stations, though the number of such employes is less than that of the botanists and entomologists. Dr. Wiley of the Agricultural department, calls attention to the comparatively large number of chemists thus employed as illustrative of the very important part which this science has had in the furthering of agricultural prosperity. Of the 49 directors of the stations, 20 were professional chemists at the time of their appointment.

BUFFALO HOTELS.

The Buffalo Florists' Club have undertaken to arrange for the accommodation of the visitors who expect to attend the convention of the S. A. F. in Buffalo.

While it is true the hotel rates will be higher than usual, there are any number of apartment houses that have been fitted out for the accommodation of San-American visitors; also private houses in the residence portion of the city, where rooms can be had for $1 and up for each person, and in many instances will be served if desired, while other places will give all meals, the latter not so plentiful.

The hotel committee have a list of houses and hotels with the rates, and any person or persons wishing to engage rooms can have same secured in advance by addressing the chairman of the committee, W. A. Adams, 473 Main street, Buffalo, N. Y., stating whether they want accommodations at hotel, apartment or private house, with or without breakfast, and the number of persons desiring accommodations together. It will be necessary to inform the committee early, as they have the refusal of several apartments for the week, where from one hundred to one hundred and fifty can be accommodated in one place.

It will be unnecessary to communicate with W. J. Stewart, secretary of the Buffalo Club as the executive committee look to the Buffalo Club to accommodate the visitors, which the hotel committee are willing to do, providing they are notified in time.

Street car facilities are excellent, the restaurants plentiful and rates reasonable. No one will be overcharged at any place, and with the above desirable apartments and private houses every one will be taken care of if they notify the committee in time.

THE COMMITTEE.

CHICAGO TO BUFFALO.

The Chicago Florists' Club has instructed the committee appointed to arrange for transportation to the convention of the Society of American Florists at Buffalo next August, to issue an announcement to the members and the trade in general that it hopes to secure especially advantageous terms and accommodations this year and that the larger the party the better the chances of securing the greatest consideration from the transportation lines.

The annual convention of the S. A. F. and the Pan-American Exposition combined will no doubt prove a great drawing card and the attendance will unquestionably be large.

If it could be known definitely in advance just about how many will compose the party from Chicago, so the committee could name an approximate number with some degree of certainty, it would materially strengthen them in their efforts to secure the largest possible concessions.

Will you therefore notify the committee—First—Whether you are reasonably certain of attending the convention and intend traveling with the club's special party?

Second—Whether you hope to join the party but are uncertain of being able to do so?

Third—Whether you have made up your mind that you cannot attend this year?

Please address reply to any one of the committees as below.

Nephrolepis Wittboldii

HERE is a plant of N. Wittboldii lifted from the bench. After being photographed 40 runners were taken from this plant and potted up. It is even more prolific than the well-known Boston fern. It has not only greatly added beauty and grace but possesses every characteristic necessary to make it a money maker for the small as well as large grower. It produces with remarkable freedom, grows quickly into a fine specimen and as a house plant is fully as tough and lasting as N. Bostoniensis.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.

A rain each day, for three days prior to Decoration Day did not spoil all the business here but on the last and all important day, an all day "wet" interfered seriously with the retail trade.

Clark reports wholesale orders from New Mexico, Utah and throughout this state very heavy on all kinds of cut flowers and blooming plants. Bridal wreath, honeysuckle and bloom from all kinds of flowering shrubs played an important part in filling outside orders; taking the place of inside stock as carnations and roses were very scarce.

The demand for window and porch boxes and also for bedding plants was larger this year than any previous year, but fortunately the local florists were all up to date with a good supply of everything needed.

William Clark, "the old timer" here, who is making fancy shrubs, etc., a long suit, is planting the grounds surrounding the new "Antlers Hotel" (considered the finest in Colorado) and will also put in special boxes for the balconies.

Memorial Day Report.

Decoration Day was a surprise. Never before was there a greater profusion of spirea and snowballs, particularly the spirea, the dull, cold weather having held it back just right to land it on Decoration Day in its prime. The cemeteries were resplendent with it; the public vault at Valley City cemetery was very tastefully trimmed with it. The first impression of a florist on seeing such a profusion of outside bloom would be that it would lessen the demand for greenhouse flowers, but such was not the case.

Roses and carnations were in the height of full crop; the cut of each was the largest ever known, and it looked as if but a small portion could be used, but the dear public all over the state came to the rescue. Shipping orders were so large and numerous that very few orders taken Tuesday and Wednesday could be but partially filled, most of them being refused entirely, as no flowers could be obtained to fill them with. Everything in the shape of a flower was used up close, no matter whether good, bad or indifferent. It was a clean up, surpassing in that respect both Xmas and Easter. There was nothing left.

Blooming plants sold out close also. The people swooped down on the greenhouses in droves. The geranium was the principal plant called for, although any nice blooming plant was in demand. The amount of increased business over last year at a rough estimate was 50 per cent.

The three weeks previous to Decoration Day were very hard on plant growth. The quality of a large percentage of the flowers was poor on account of the continued unpleasant weather. The atmosphere had become so humid that it affected carnations, causing them to begin to rot on the plants. This was the occasion of some complaint from shipping orders, as the blooms did not keep as they ought after being shipped, although perfectly fresh when shipped.

The grade of carnations that retailed at 35 cents was as a whole of very poor quality. The better grade brought 50 cents; a few extra fine Bradts, Marquis and Irene bringing 75 cents per dozen. Roses, $1 to $1.25 per dozen. Beauties, $2 to $3.50 per dozen, a few exceptionally fine and long stems, 50 cents apiece.

G. F. C.

MILWAUKEE.

Decoration day trade was a record breaker. Anything considered a flower, whether good or inferior, found a market. Carnations led the call and supply was extremely short. Outdoor stock was scarce, owing to the late spring.

GOOD RETURNS.

We have been very well pleased with the advs. we have had in the REVIEW, as they have given us good returns.—ROBERT MAXN, Lansing, Mich.

THE FLORISTS' MANUAL.
A Reference Book for Commercial Florists

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

Plants.

It is a great pleasure to note that in almost every section of the country there was an increased business for Memorial Day, for apart from the financial point of view, it augurs well for the future in many ways. Here in New York whilst the decorations of public monuments were not so elaborate as in the past, the work was more generally done, for scarcely a monument escaped attention in the way of flags, flowers or plants. A few examples of bad taste were shown by inexperienced decorators, but the majority of the work done was simple and inexpensive.

The number of plants used in the several cemeteries around New York for Decoration Day reached high the million mark, and the immense quantities of cut flowers and several sorts of designs used make the event of great importance from a florist's standpoint. Of course the florists whose places are adjacent to the cemeteries reap the greater portion of the benefit, but they have their troubles. A good deal of blackmail is levied upon them; we hear of cases where from $250.00 to $500.00 has to be paid the authorities for the privilege of doing business in the cemetery, and apart from this there is a semi war of cut prices among the men themselves which proves nothing except the smallness of small things.

The window boxes and plant vases, we are glad to see, are more popular and better done than ever before; the work is done fuller and with good judgment. Phoenix, hydrangeas and a general assortment of flowering and showy foliage plants are the rule, with heavy vines of ivy, variegated vinea and nasturtiums to finish. A great many Nasturtium Japonica are seen in tubs, and there seems to be quite a run on large bay trees.

Notwithstanding the immense quantities of plants of all kinds used, the growers are so far dissatisfied with the season's trade. On account of the weather blooms have been shy a coming, and the aforementioned cutting of prices, and the flooding of the market with rubbish, because one's great grandfather left the stock in the greenhouses when he died.

Whilst we are on the plant question don't belittle the importance of your own place being attractively planted. By having your own place made beautiful you induce others to do likewise, and if it be only a box or a vase, do your best on it and don't wait till July.

June Weddings.

June weddings are of course the most important matters at present, and they have been quite numerous, with many more to follow. There have been some very fine decorations done this month, not very elaborate, it is true, but the work in many cases was well done, and we are sorry it was impossible to get photos of the best. This is one of the drawbacks in our business. There is either no time or there are prohibitive rules that make it out of the question to illustrate what is worth while.

Flowering shrubs have formed the greater portion of the material thus far used in church decoration, and though this kind of stock may be derived from greenhouses or market quarters, it is nevertheless splendid material for artistic fingers; in fact, there is nothing better nor more appropriate to early June. Spiraea, deutzias, mock orange, snowballs, weigela, in fact, anything you have in bloom can be used to good advantage. Cut the stock in the morning while it is cool and moist, and it will keep in good condition as long as necessary. Laburnum and hawthorn, so shyly used or considered too tender in the north, have of recent years proved themselves worthy of better acquaintance and more appreciation; they are in bloom in the neighborhood of New York at present. Nothing prettier than laburnum can be used for mirror, or any form of pendent decorative work; its recemes of golden chain-like flowers can be made to show off most effectively if care be taken in the makeup of the background. Arches of double red or pink hawthorn can be made very beautiful, providing you don't make them too apparently manufactured. In all cases where long sprayed flowers can be used stiffness or acute formal lines should be avoided; by this we don't mean that your work should have a hap-hazard thrown up appearance; there is a great knack in fixing a spray out of line, as if it grew that way, and you know a spray of flowers always grows beautiful—the sun compels it to face the right way.

The most effective way to arrange flowering shrubs is to group them separately; it is disastrous to many to mix them up; doesn't matter if it is only one vase, or a cluster panel, put them so each will show to advantage; those with thorns should be where they can cause no trouble. With the present abundance of outdoor flowers very good decorations can be done at small cost, and why not give your customers the benefit of the season? You need not put it in your estimate, but if the opportunity is easy you can put it in your work.

Greens always form a most important item in decorative work, whether it be plants or cut material. The absence of wild snailax from the market need not bother you, for the woods abound with splendid stock. The long drooping vine like branches of Salix babylonica is fine to use for funeral or memorial decorations, but it is entirely out of place at weddings. Not so with oak, maple or any of the hard foliage trees. Scarlet or swamp maple is perhaps the most effective, but the work must be done the day of the ceremony. There are lots of vines such as Virginia creeper, wild grape, etc., that make good material if cut at the proper time.

Where a hall or room is decorated in permanent formal designs fine work can be done with galax and lindenleaf (in the lindenleaf sprays on hoops or rings of the desired size and wire your galax leaves into Roman garlands; you can have the wreaths green and the garlands brown, or vice versa; have your loops connect with the center of the top of the wreaths. This scheme can in like manner be worked out in flowers, especially with roses, the wreaths being of different color to the garlands, a bow of ribbon being attached to the top of the wreath connecting with garland. We are sure a hint is all that is necessary to most decorators.

Speaking of roses, of course good work can be done with any kind of stock, but in a week or so there will be an abundance of outdoor roses, and these will enable you to do your very prettiest, which need not be too mechanical. Cut your Crimson Ramblers, or other climbing roses, in long sprays and use them so in garland, or tracery, or arbor, or arch; it is easy for you to wire a few extra ones on where it may seem required, but don't be too exact in execution. There is nothing so bad as a decoration done up in checker board regularity; such decorations are the work of mechanics rather than of artists. From now on outdoor roses will be the choicest of all decorative material, and though there are many grand varieties not grown hereabouts, nevertheless we should do our best with what we can get and encourage the cultivation of the deserving kinds.

Peonies are fine for showy work, and many of the white and light pink varieties are splendid; finer work can be done with them in large decorations than with anything we know of; they look elegant at the end of pews, or in large vases, but can be used in any manner.

A daisy decoration can be made exclusively of grasses and field daisies, which should also constitute the flowers carried or worn; don't despise flowers because they grow wild or are abundant; you can, if you have an artistic reputation, usually get a good price for the arranging of them, and then again, many refined and educated people prefer certain flowers and their own fancies. Thus, though it is not a new custom, some fashionable under flowering trees out on lawns, nature forming and constituting the floral canopy. We might take a hint from this and have less of the bells, horseshoes, lovers-knots, wreaths, etc., connected with church or house decoration. Simplicity may be often lighted, but it is seldom at fault.

Regarding bouquets, there isn't much new to relate. The custom seems to be more bridesmaids or flower girls, thus making the procession more impressive. On several occasions lately where there has been six or more bridesmaids, the bouquets have been made to match in pairs, that is, two each, of different colors or flowers. Valley and gardenias, and valley and orchids have been among the choice brides' bunches seen, while Cattleya Mendellii or C. Gigas for attendants. But then, as you know, sweet peas or any kind of rose can be made pretty. Long wide tulle ribbon is mostly used on all florist work at present. Spray bunches of small climbing or polyantha roses tied with very narrow ribbon will be the latest for next week. The same will be used for dress garlands and head wreaths, the wreaths to take the place of hats. Blue corn flowers are being extensively used by both sexes at present for street wear. If you intend to be an up-to-date florist next season plant out a bench of some rose not on the market and which you can make a feature of. If you have no glass make a contract with some good grower. Now is the time to plan for next winter's rose crop and do something to get out of the rut of one or two varieties. We will have an immense variety of carnations to choose from, but very few roses.

surrounding territory and converted it into a poplar jungle. The moral is, plant good trees while you are about it. I recall plantations of sugar maple and black walnut that have made almost as much growth as the soft ones named above, while they are incomparably superior in beauty and value of timber.

The accompanying plan embraces a plot 104 feet each way. This is about a quarter of an acre in the southeast quarter of the farm. A like space directly north can be used for barn and other outbuildings to be reached by road

FARM HOMES.

There should be beautiful home grounds in the country as well as in the city and suburbs, and the present period of prosperity for the farmer will no doubt make him more likely to wish for something better around his home than he has had in the past. All farmers are not stingy and many now spend considerable in decorating their home grounds, though rarely with wisdom. Is not this a field to be developed by the florist?

If we look over homes that were founded, say, fifty years ago, or even half that long, many instructive facts may be observed. Perhaps the young farmer in his eagerness for speedy results planted around his house with soft maples and still softer willows, cottonwood, balm of gilead and silver leaf poplars. They grew sure enough beyond his wildest expectations. Their gigantic limbs burdened with leaves beyond their strength became a menace in every storm to the overshadowed house. In summer they abound with every creeping, crawling, boring and biting abomination known to the department of entomology. The silver poplars and balm of gilead with a numberless host of suckers annexed the Chicago. JOHN HIGGINS.

CHRYSA nth EMUM NOTES.

Planting.

Planting the benches should be proceeded with now as soon as the plants are in a fit condition and the house is ready.

The arrangement for supporting the plants should be put up, where possible, before the benches are filled, as it is then a much quicker and simpler operation. If you propose to run your plants up on strings, put up your wires over the top to run your string up to when the time comes. If you run several wires lengthwise over the bench and tie your plants to them direct, you can fix up the ends of the benches ready, so that by-and-by all you will need to do will be to just run your wires along and fasten them.

Be sure that your bed will be well drained before you get your soil in, no matter whether you use solid beds or benches. The mums need lots of water while growing, but the bed should be so arranged that the surplus water will pass away readily, for good results cannot possibly be attained if the soil gets sour and stagnant.

Some growers put a layer of rotten manure in the bottom of the bench before putting in the soil, but it is a practice I do not agree with. The constant watering will have leached away most of the good properties of the manure before the roots of the mums will be in a condition to use it. Keep your manure until August or September and then use as a top dressing when the watering will wash the goodness into the soil instead of out of the bottom of the bench. The best possible thing to put in the bottom of the bench is a layer of fresh green sod. The water drains readily through this and as it rots it will be of great benefit to the plants. This you can see for yourself when you empty your benches in the fall, and see the perfect net work of roots where the sod was laid. If you cannot by any means procure sod the excelsior used for packing will fill up the cracks and drain all right, but it is of course no other benefit to the plants.

If your soil is very heavy it will probably pay you to use a liberal proportion of coarse sand in it. While the mum is not by any means fastidious as to soil I have found a light sandy loam well enriched to suit it better than anything else. If you use bone meal in your soil (and it is the best thing you can use), make sure that it is evenly distributed through the heap by turning it over twice before wheeling into the house.

The distance apart to plant is a matter that every man must settle for himself, since everything depends on the grade of flowers it is proposed to grow. For the very best flowers ten inches by ten is not too much for the varieties with large and abundant foliage, such as Robinson, Wedding, Hurrell, etc., but varieties with small foliage and less vigorous habit, such as Pennsylvania, Evangeline, Morel, etc., or varieties whose foliage hangs down close against the stem, like Sanderbrinck, can be planted 9x8 and still give extra fine flowers.

Timothy Eaton is apparently a variety that can, from its habit, be grown a little closer than the average, and if this variety produces a good, even crop of flowers it will undoubtedly rank high as a commercial variety. For smaller flowers of course you can plant closer, say 8x6, or even 7x6, but remember that close planting and an extra fine stem and foliage cannot possibly go together.

I like to get my flowers as good as I can and let the other fellow grow the smaller ones. The case to my mind resolves itself into a question of arithmetic. Which is the most profitable, an average of one flower to a foot, bringing in from 30 to 50 cents, or four flowers from the same space, bringing in, say, 5 to 6 cents each? If more growers grew finer flowers it would cut down the quantity about half and this would do much to obviate the glut which always occurs along in November. It is unnecessary to say that it is always the smallest flowers that drag the most in a glutted market.

How on earth some men can afford to grow mums at the prices they get for their flowers is more than I can fathom.

Bridal Bouquet of Orchids Arranged by the Shanahan Florist Co., San Francisco.

It sometimes requires close figuring for the best growers to show a balance on the right side of the ledger. Mum growing is not like Standard Oil stock as a dividend payer, and about the only satisfaction you have is when the flowers are open and Mrs. So and So comes round to your free exhibition and exclaims: "Oh, how perfectly lovely! How you must love to look after these beautiful flowers!" It makes you feel good for a little while till you recollect that winter is coming on apace and you haven't yet got the price for your coal, or the thought grips your heart with a sudden fear, as the novelists say, that the last installment on the new boiler is due to be paid tomorrow. Then you observe slowly and sorrowfully: "Yes, madam, there is more love than money in mum growing."

BRIAN BOBU.

JAPAN LILIES FOR EASTER.

One of your subscribers sends a question for W. S. which is this: "Will it be practicable to grow Lilium longiflorum, Japanese bulbs, for next Easter? As it comes March 30th I have thought it would be doubtful about getting them early. Will Mr. Scott tell us how to treat them if it can be done with any reasonable prospect of success."

We believe there will be as many of the Japan lilies grown for next Easter as there were last spring, although Easter came two weeks later this year than next. There was no difficulty at all in getting them in early last April and we believe with a little extra effort they will be easily flowered by March 30th.

About their cultivation. It is a great object to get the bulbs delivered to you as early as possible. We have had the best results by getting them potted immediately they arrive and put out of doors and covering with an inch of spent hops or very well decayed manure, and leave them till towards the end of November. They are then thoroughly well rooted and will endure a good heat. After being in the houses two or three weeks, or say until New Year's, a strong, steady heat is then necessary with no let-up and they will come along very fast. The last two months 70 degrees at night will not hurt them. Getting them well rooted outside and then rushing them along at a uniformly steady heat in the houses is much better than having them under glass early in the fall and keeping them at a lower or fluctuating temperature.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

BRIDAL BOUQUET.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph of a bridal bouquet of orchids arranged by the Shanahan Florist Company, San Francisco. It is certainly a very handsome bouquet and the detail in the picture is so good that our readers will have no difficulty in naming the species used.

HYBRID WATER LILIES.

"About the year 1879," says M. Latour-Marliac, in the London Garden, "I commenced the work in earnest by crossing the finest types of hardy and tropical nymphaeas which I had in cultivation here. These early attempts were at first negative in their results, but soon afterwards I scored an unexpected success in obtaining a hybrid with deep red flowers, the seed-parent of which was Nymphaea pygmaea alba, fertilized with pollen from the flowers of N. rubra indica. Unfortunately, and to my great disappointment, this magnificent specimen proved hopelessly barren. In order to obtain plants of a really ornamental character, I considered that it was especially necessary that I should make it a point not to employ as seed-parents any subjects except such as were very free-flowering, and by rigorously adhering to this principle, I succeeded, little by little, by means of numerous sowings and strict selections, in raising types which were in every way improved in the form and other characteristics of their flowers. It was thus that one of these new subjects (N. alba), fertilized with the pollen from the American species, N. flava, produced N. Marliacea chromatella, which has achieved such a high reputation. In the following year I obtained the hybrid N. odorata sulphurea from a similar crossing of N. odorata alba with N. flava, and the last named species has also been the pollen-parent of N. pygmaea Helvola.

"About the same time two species bearing a high character made their first appearance in gardens, viz.: N. sphaerocarpa, a native of Sweden, and the elegant N. odorata rubra, found at Cape Cod, in North America. The sparse-flowering character of N. sphaerocarpa determined me to reject it for hybridizing purposes, and I gave all my attention to the fascinating American species, N. odorata rubra, which, employed as the pollen-parent, with my choicest specimen of N. alba as seed-parent, rewarded me with the sweet N. Marliacea rosea and N. Marliacea carnea. N. odorata rubra was subsequently the parent of the beautiful N. odorata exoniata, the color of which is pink approaching to carmine. As the last-raised specimen of this first group of my lovely hybrid nymphæas, I must mention the remarkable M. Marliacea albida, the flowers of which have not yet been surpassed in size by those of any other nymphæas."

GERMAN GARDENING.

We present herewith two engravings we have reproduced from Moeller's Deutsche Gaertner-Zeitung which seem to be good examples of the formal and more natural use of tender plants in German gardening.

The first is certainly a beautiful picture and shows to what excellent use Both photographs were of gardens in the city of Frankfort-on-the-Main.

BUFFALO.

As we expected, the week or more of varying weather which delayed all planting till the 3rd or 4th of this month has crowded the whole work into a few days, for as soon as a fine day came the cry was, "I must have my flowers out by Sunday," or "Why don't you till my vase?" No excuse is accepted by the great majority. There are, however, a few sweet souls who say, "When you have time; I know that you are rushed," and this soothes the savage breast. And we may as well remember that every other business has its troubles, although the large exhibit of aquatics of Henry A. Dreer. Mr. Chadborn is here putting up their ventilating system in one of the conservatories.

There was a well attended meeting of the club last week and all the committees reported progress. Perhaps the most important is the committee on exhibition, who have as their manager Mr. Keitsch, and it is a pleasure to be able to speak continuously of the splendid work he is doing.

The Hotel Committee's chairman, Mr. Adams, reports lots of correspondence and inquiries, and is willing to locate everyone if they will state definitely what they want. The committee on sports are very busy men just now but palms and similar subjects may be put in the summer time. Visitors to Glen Island during the New York convention last August will remember that the gardener there had made similar use of palms and other decorative plants along shaded walks and in available nooks with the most pleasing effect. We believe there are great possibilities in this direction.

The second picture shows a good example of the formal style of German gardening, and this style certainly has many admirers. Illustrative of the importance attached to it we may add that the same issue of the journal mentioned contained separate engravings of each of two of the beds on the slope at the back, together with a large diagram of each showing just how they were planted.

I believe there are few that crowd so much work into a few days as we do, and heavy work at that.

Business I would call quite lively; in fact good all around, and seldom are there any flowers to spare. Some of our florists have done considerable business at the Pan-American. C. D. Zimmerman has embellished the grounds of the German Village, and some other the Infant Incubator. Don't laugh at the title—it's a fact. Wee small creatures are here brought along to life who would otherwise have no chance. J. H. Rebstock has also fixed up several of the Midway folks. Mr. Wilson of Western Springs has been here looking after the exhibits of J. C. Vaughan. J. Austin Shaw and Mrs. Shaw are in town. They both are delighted with the Pan Am. Mr. Tricker was here again looking at they will not forget their duty and Philadelphia shall have a chance to retrieve their laurels on a good alley. We have had but few replies to that letter I sent out about the three-men-team to give smaller or more distant cities a chance; yet we hope to us soon as the hull comes.

Denver's crack bowler has gone and got married. Philip Scott had lots of sport in his make-up but it is all over for some years. The class that he belongs to are awfully good for a number of years but as time rolls on the old sporting tendencies reassert themselves. What a sensible thing if we could start this life-long journey just as we meant to keep it up to the end, and I hope in this case it may be so.

How to Enter the Pan-American.

Some of your readers may visit the German Gardening.

Pan-American early in the season and for that reason I write a few words of advice. Either from indifference or for some object not clearly known the street cars carry 75 per cent of all the visitors to what is known as the West Amherst gate. This brings you directly to the rear of some of the large buildings, also the noise and hubbub of the Midway, and it is probable you will never see the real beauty of the whole scene. If you do you have already received the impression that the Pan-American is a crowded place and little different from any other big fair. Now this is all wrong.

I beg of you one and all to enter the grounds from Lincoln Parkway. To do this take the Main street cars that are marked "Forest Lawn" and never mind what the conductor says, get off at Lincoln Parkway. A walk of 200 yards brings you to the grand entrance and then another 200 yards through the lovely old park brings you to the Triumphal Causeway with the four majestic towers. To the right or left the view is beautiful, but the view you are facing is one you will never forget. You are now entering the Grand Esplanade; horticulture group on the left, government building on the right, music, ethnology, machinery building, liberal arts, electricity, agriculture to the right and left of the Grand Basin, and in the distance the majestic Electric Tower crowned by the Goddess of Light whose outstretched hand is 405 feet from the ground. This grand court with its setting of magnificent architecture, its fountains, its trees and statuary, is a picture never yet equalled. This is the verdict of men who have seen all that is to be seen. Gov. Roosevelt said so, and so do I, and that settles it.

There are sights enough to last you a week besides all this, but I beg you to take in the beauty of the scene first. Here are the state buildings; the rose garden, a beautiful fifteen acres; the Stadium, the largest and best built arena for athletic sport of modern times. To give you an idea of this Stadium: I saw Cornell and Carlisle Colleges playing a game of baseball and they occupied but one corner. It seats most comfortably 12,000, and as many more could stand without encroaching on the cinder paths, but its wonderful proportions must be seen to be realized. You will be sure to see the Midway and everything else if you have time, but of this it was not my intention to write.

The next best entrance is known as Elmwood Gate, but too many who enter at this beautiful entrance steer for the Midway. If they will walk through the rose garden they will then come to the Triumphal Causeway and take in the same grand scene that I have tried to describe, and you will, I am sure, exclaim as I heard many: "This is worth a long journey to see alone." I am not writing this, reader, for the Pan-American, but for you. Feast your vision and higher senses on the sublime and beautiful. Let the frivolous and common place be seen later. WM. SCOTT.

BOSTON.

Market Conditions.

To the grower and his salesman it is a situation of sublime horror emphasized by comparison with last week. It may not look so bad to the retailer, because there is really a good enough trade running along, but not enough to handle the immense cut of second and third-class material. The demand is largely for weddings just now, and is therefore chiefly for first-class goods, of which there is a great plenty of all kinds. Cheap grades drag fearfully and thousands of pinks and roses go upon the street at lowest prices, while even this method of being marketed is denied to large lots. The bravest fakir will not handle very poor material now. Sun, wind and dust soon make the best look bad enough, if put upon the street.

It is of but little use to quote prices. Any one can buy very low if they wish, but every salesman has his customers who use him fairly well now in return for decent usage on his part at some other time, so that prices range from very low to fairly good.

Various Items.

While being instrumental in extending courtesies of Mr. Thomas Galvin and his managers a few days ago, I was admitted to a church and an elegant dwelling after both were lavishly decorated by this leading floral concern. It was the first thing of the kind I ever saw, and for amount of material used and skill in arrangement it was surely an eye-opener to me and reflected great credit upon the taste and skill of Mr. Thomas Welch, who had it in charge. It is easier now for me to see where the large expense of a wedding decoration is legitimate. I was not there as a reporter, however, and must not describe some new features they are now utilizing.

The sturdy ranks of the floral Tuohy family has been reinforced by the arrival of a heavy recruit from Liverpool, where he has served upon the police force. Being badly burned out of house and home, he determined to try his fortune in the land where the honest efforts of his five brothers are so successful. He is big enough to hold down any remarks he may make, but Uncle Sam's farm has use for many more of that kind of stock, even if they do take up a little room.

The daily papers give glowing accounts of the first exhibition in the new horticultural hall. The exhibition is for art alone, no prizes being given and participants vying with each other to secure best effects.

In order to prepare the material for his heavy Boston & Main railroad order, J. W. Howard has been utilizing the John Dane place at West Medford for a month or two. His Winter Hill and his Woburn houses are also overrun with an immense amount of stock which is all sold.

Carl J. Dane has been suffering with Bright's disease for some little time and is unable to work regularly.

Club Meeting.

There was a fairly good average attendance at the Florists' Club meeting on Monday night, and those who were absent have cause to regret it for the entertainment committee had provided one of the best programs in many years. Mr. John K. L. M. Farquhar, of Boston, Mass., delivered a most interesting illustrated lecture on "The Peoples, Customs and Flora of the Hawaiian Islands." Mr. Farquhar handled his subject in a masterly manner, showing a remarkable acquaintance with every detail. Some 140 views were thrown on the canvas illustrating the magnificent scenery and resources of the islands. It would appear that in addition to the majority of our most beautiful commercial greenhouse plants, there are a numberless class of plants growing wild on these islands which deserve extensive cultivation.

From the views shown, and the remarks made, the lecturer succeeded in convincing his audience that, in the acquisition of the Hawaiian Islands the United States had procured a horticultural paradise of unlimited possibilities. Experiments were being made in lily culture, and the trial fields of Harrisia and longiflorums shown went far to prove Mr. Farquhar's assertion that these bulbs could be grown better there than in Bermuda or Japan. It was possible, he thought, to get two crops of bulbs a year, and they could be shipped any month desired.

There are no florists' stores on the islands, but the natives gather, arrange and offer for sale the beautiful flowers which grow luxuriantly in the mountains. Many pretty customs of wearing garlands and wreaths of flowers have for a long time been in vogue there, and from the samples of the work shown the florists and peoples of these states could copy much of value. The economic resources of the islands are great. Fields were shown which produced 60 tons of sugar cane to the acre; from this 12 tons of raw sugar could be extracted; all manner of tropical fruit was being grown there, and the lecturer made an eloquent plea that the government of the United States should see to it that the best varieties of the tropical fruits, at present growing in the British West Indies and in other places, should at once be extensively cultivated in the Hawaiian islands.

The Chinese were the best gardeners out there and the climate rendered possible the cultivation of nearly all varieties of vegetables. Mr. Farquhar gave the New York Florist club an intellectual treat, for which he was given a rising vote of thanks.

The business end of the club meeting disposed of many important matters. The transportation committee placed before the club the terms offered by the several railroads for taking the crowd to Buffalo in August; the committee were inclined to favor the D. L. & W. and L-high Valley systems, but made no recommendations, and left the matter to the club's decision; after a very lengthy discussion, in which every member present took part, it was finally, on motion of Mr. Weathered, decided to go by the West Shore road. The round trip will cost about $10.70 exclusive of meals.

The New York party will travel in the day time and it is expected that the number will be about 150. The committee were requested to see the West Shore authorities ante tickets available at Niagara Falls, inasmuch as that is supposed to be a part of the Pan-American show. The decision to go by the West Shore was arrived at because that road assisted the club on the occasion of the convention here last year. Mr. O'Mara reported that he had investigated the matter of accommodations for the club's party during his recent visit to Buffalo, and on his recommendation the Larkin Apartment House, leased by the Buffalo florists, was decided to be headquarters for the New York Florists' Club during the convention. There will be accommodation there for 150 people, the rooms will be $1.00 and $1.50 per day exclusive of meals. There is a restaurant opposite seating 1,000 people; the location is pleasant and convenient, being only six minutes' front from convention hall, and every comfort is assured.

The summer outing committee reported perfected plans for the club's picnic and sail to Locust Point, on July 8. It was decided to send each member two tickets which are to be paid for at the boat; anyone desirous of going can procure tickets at the dock. The capacity of the boat is 1,000 and the committee hope to see a full turn out of members, relatives and friends. They assure all that the ghost of Iona Island will not appear during this outing.

Progress was reported on matters pertaining to the club's fall show. Peter Crowe, of Utica, through Mr. Nugent, sent $20.00 as a prize to be offered at the show. On motion of W. J. Stewart, Mr. W. R. Smith, of Washington, D. C. was by rising vote unanimously elected an honorary member of the New York Florists' Club. Mr. Alex. Wallace, who was acting as chairman of the meeting, spoke of Mr. Smith's services to American horticulture. The New York florists would gladly shower any honor or favor in its power on this great old veteran.

A communication was read from the Horticultural Society of New York, announcing the postponement of their rose and strawberry show at Bronx Park till June 26. The lateness of the season renders this necessary and it is hoped that all will assist in making this a worthy show. Schedules can be got from L. Barron, 136 Liberty St.

Great regret was expressed at the sudden deaths of P. Hilton and wife. Mr. Hilton was a member of the club and superintendent of Salem Fields Cemetery, on Long Island; his wife died shortly after him, and they will both be buried today (Tuesday). The club ordered its floral token sent to both caskets, and appointed Messrs. Miller, Melis and Young a committee to draw up resolutions expressing the regrets of the club at their sad and untimely demise.

Business.

Business in all branches seems to be fairly good for the time of the year. Good roses are short in supply, carnations are plentiful, and there is an abundance of outdoor stock available, rendering it possible to easily furnish any sort of work at short notice.

PITTSBURG.

Club Meeting.

The regular meeting of the Pittsburg and Allegheny Florists' and Gardeners' Club was held in the Pittsburg Cut Flower Company's rooms, 504 Liberty street, Thursday evening, June 6. We considered the coming flower show, and our intended trip to Buffalo, and sat in session over a lot of rhododendrons from Schenley Park.

Because of the unusual cold, wet weather and consequent lateness of the rose season, the club decided to postpone the date of the show from the 13th till the 19th inst. There is every prospect of a good show. Our home people are exultant, and kind friends in Boston, New York, Rochester, Philadelphia, and other places are going to send us exhibits of flowers. While we cannot aim at the refinement and grandeur of the recent great flower show in Boston, for there is no such plant or flower material here, in our own small way we expect to do big things.

A committee consisting of Mr. Reine-man, Ernest Ludwig and Fred Burki was appointed to look after transportation and other matters pertaining to our visit to the florists' convention at Buffalo in August. We expect to make up a delegation of about fifty and go in a body. And some of our boys are pretty sporty, too, judging by the way they have taken to bowling, and we all are smacking our lips in expectation of quaffing from the silver cup they hope to win in the Rainbow city.

Three new names were proposed for membership.

Then the rhododendron flowers were spread upon the table and passed around for note and discussion. Last winter was very disastrous to these shrubs and the more tender ones succumbed, especially those on clay soils. The unbroken drought of last year from July till November was largely to blame for this. The varieties shown were from the open plantations and unprotected in any way in winter, hence may be considered as among the hardiest and best suited for outdoor cultivation in this neighborhood. Among them were atrosanguineum, Charles Dickens, Kettle drum, Guido, H.

W. Sargent, and Caracacus, bright and deep scarlet; James Bateman and E. S. Rand, scarlet; Softon, maroon; Charles Bagley, cherry red; purpureum grandiflorum, purplish rose; Old Port, plum purple; Everestianum, lilac rose, a gem for outdoor culture; Hannibal and Alexander Dancer, bright rose; roseum elegans, rose, and Miss Owen and Minnie, bluish. PHILADELPHIA.

Business.

Business has fallen off a little since one week ago. There are some days of brisk demand and some days of hardly any demand at all. Both prices and quality are declining. Beauties and sweet peas are good stock and sell well on most days; La France and Kaiserins of fair quality are also desirable; Brides and Maids are not so popular, chiefly because they are getting poor. Carnations are only in fair demand; peonies are now very plentiful and have fallen in price, $3 to $5 per 100 is about the rate.

While Bridesmaids of ordinary type won't do, really good blooms have been eagerly sought at $5 and even $6 per 100. Thomas Foulds grows them on benches better even than the solid beds have them, curiously enough. Carnot is selling well at about same rate as Maid; it is a good summer sort. La France is not altogether satisfactory for first-class work, being often light. A good summer pink of deep color would be an acquisition; under Jacques are bringing $2 and $3 per hundred. A goodly number are moved at these figures. Peonies are so much over done at times that one grower said he had thousands of them that it did not pay him to cut and market at prevailing prices. It seems that the early sorts and a few selected varieties are the profitable ones.

Outdoor roses are in full supply this week; thanks to the cool nights they are unusually fine. Rhododendrons are also in bloom and when obtainable make showy decorative material. Sweet peas are very late; only those started under glass have yet bloomed to any extent. The end of this week will see the best of All and the Mont Blanc at their best.

Various Notes.

The weather continues to excite. After an extraordinary storm, which fortunately did little damage, though it brought heavy hail, came some very warm days, then another atmospheric disturbance and this week two nights saw the mercury in the lower fifties. Just think, nearly 50 degrees on June 10, the very day selected by so conservative a plansman as George Huxter as a safe time for planting out crotons!

The plants for beds and boxes are cleared up pretty well; small vines are scarce. Some nice geraniums and other things can be had that would have sold on the 30th of May had they been brightened by a blossom. Crotons have sold well. Robert Craig & Son found it necessary to rope off a lot of these plants in order to keep some for growing on into specimens for fall sales.

The demand for cannas, 4, 5, and 6-inch, has kept pace with, at times, even exceeded the supply. The varieties preferred are the novelties of two to five years ago and one or two old standbys.

There is some seashore demand for bedding plants, which should be cultivated by those having surplus stock.

The Andorra Nurseries have held many a commencement and wedding decoration with their peonies.

Joseph Heacock is hard at work cleaning and refitting his rose houses. Several are already planted with young stock.

The June Florists' Club meeting showed an encouraging increase in the attendance. It was good to see the president again in his accustomed place. Few men are more respected and esteemed in our profession than William K. Harris.

Charles H. Fox reopened his hotel, LaBelle Inn, at Atlantic City, on the 8th of June for the summer months.

A wager was made last fall between a girl and a man as to who could produce and present the other one sweet pea bloom first this season. Both got seed of Burpee's "Earliest of All." The man sowed his seed in his garden early in March. The girl, who unexpectedly moved into the city during the winter, started her seed in April in pots on the window, transferring them to a tiny back yard known as "the prairie" and watering them with nitric acid. On Friday, June 7th, the man telephoned to his fair adversary that his sweet peas were in bloom. She said she had none, but until he presented his the water was won. The next morning the girl got up early and to her surprise found one little pea blossom open "on the prairie!" She put it in a box, rushed to her opponent's office and left it with many instructions to the office boy to present it promptly to his employer. Two hours later she received the man's box of sweet peas. She had triumphed despite tall chimneys, cats and fences!

The Germantown Horticultural Society held its banner meeting of the season on Monday evening, June 10th. Edwin Lonsdale gave an interesting address on "Begonias" in general and Gloire de Lorraine in particular, illustrated by some specimens of this variety. N. Dubois Miller, who was wonderfully successful in cultivating plants at home in his few leisure hours, told of an "Amateur's Garden." Both speakers were listened to with much interest and received a vote of thanks. N. Dubois Miller's address was an inspiration to his hearers, telling them what they might do with their own hands and the pleasure of doing it. His advice to buy only seeds, not florists' plants, and especially to avoid those plants forced into full bloom to see and consequently somewhat exhausted, was a little hard on some of his audience, but food for thought, nevertheless.

There was an exhibition of outdoor roses, glorioxias and tuberous begonias. The audience was large and appreciative.

Joseph Towell of Hillside has found a very good demand for Centaurea imperialis; in fact he has not been able to cut enough of them.

The rose meeting of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society will be held on Tuesday, June 18th. PHIL.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The market is very quiet at this writing with the supply greatly exceeding the demand and very little can be said of the local trade the past week. The wholesale houses have been greatly overstocked with cut flowers of all kinds and the demand slow. The retail trade is rather slow though some of the West End florists have been busy as there is quite a crop of June weddings. The counter trade has dropped down to the summer basis. Mildew seems to be a rule on roses but at times a lot of well-grown flowers are noted.

Prices have remained nearly stationary. American Beauties still lead in demand but first-class stock is out of the question, though our wholesalers are still handling a few good blooms. Two dollars and $3 per dozen is the price for the best and from that down to $2 per 100. Meteors have a good call but are off color and there are plenty of butaeads among them; the best have rather short stems; price, $2 to $4 per 100. Maids, Brides, Gates, Perles and Jacques are from $1 to $4 per 100 with plenty of them on hand for all demands.

Carnations have kept up wonderfully well but are getting small; the supply is larger than ever. All varieties and colors are selling at $1 per 100 in 100 lots. Saturday about 20,000 were sold at $2.50 per 1,000. This really is cheaper than they ever have been sold for before and the growers are not feeling so good just now as they did a month ago. Sweet peas are also badly over stocked at present and are cheaper than ever; 15 cents per 100 or $1 per 1000. Light colors have the call; darker shades go to the waste pile. Peonies, it was feared a week ago, would be badly over stocked, yet, though plenty of them are in, they are selling well. The best bring $3 per 100; poorer grades go for much less. Cape Jasmines are very plentiful at 50 cents per 100. Gladioli spikes are selling at 5 cents, but sale is slow. Greens of all kinds are in good demand.

Various Items.

Only one or two of our late street fairs remain in the city. Those who had money left town and went to Chicago and Buffalo, where they can have full sway. Some of our downtown florists are about as bad as the fairs were, judging from the price they have displayed in their windows—carnations 15 cents per dozen and roses at 25 cents and really first-class stock at that.

Martin Reukauf, representing H. Bayersdorfer & Co., of Philadelphia, was in town the past week.

Frank Ellis not to be outdone by his friend Kuehn as a poet has dedicated the following poem to the Review:

"In order to sell your stock out quick
The Review is the paper to do the trick.
It's a paper that's second to none—
A little adv. and your work is done."

The Eggeing Floral Co. furnished the decorations for the Anheuser wedding the past week, which was one of the largest of the season.

Mr. Anderson has retired from the firm of Thompson, Anderson & Kennedy, horticultural builders.

Weber, Walbart and Ayers, out in the West End, report business good for this time of the year with wedding, school and funeral work.

Wm. Kalisch & Sons, on Delmar, report that they have been very busy during the planting out season. They had the contract for the flower beds at Mayor Welch's residence. Mr. E. Kalisch will make a trip East next month, returning by the way of Chicago.

Schray, Beyer, Fillmore and Windler, our South End florists are taking things easy just now, as the planting out season is over. All report a good season, being pretty well cleaned up.

Theo. Klockenkemper, J. W. Dunford, Billy Winter and The Chicago Carnation Co. are sending in great quantities of fine carnations to this market.

Carew Sanders has improved much the past week, being now able to sit up. The doctors report that all danger is past.

J. F. Windt, the Bayard avenue florist, suffered the loss of 350 lights of glass from the recent hail storm. Mr. Windt has his place looking in good shape and reports a fine spring trade in plants; the cut flower trade has also been excellent.

E. W. Guy, of Belleville, was in town the past week buying supplies. Mr. Guy reports that his father, F. W. Guy, has left Kimmswick, Mo., and has bought a place near Pacific, Mo.

Bowling.

The weather was very hot on Monday, and this, no doubt, kept many of the bowlers away from the alleys. Only six members rolled, and they made the following scores:

	1	2	3	4	Tl. Av.
A. Y. Ellison	202	154	153	—	509 183

CHICAGO.

The Market.

"There are a few good flowers and a million poor ones. The good ones are wanted and the poor ones are not wanted at any price." That's the way one dealer describes existing conditions and the majority seem to agree with him. There is certainly a great abundance of flowers but still it is a little difficult to pick up any quantity of choice shipping grade. Quotations on the best grade of teas are $4 to $5 and on the lower grades the fall is steep and sudden. On carnations $2 is about the top with excellent stock selling at $1 to $1.50 and clean ups at as low as 30 to 50 cents. On Beauties $3.00 is still the top but the low grades reach down farther and get there quicker. The best Golden Gates bring as high as $8 and fair Liberties are priced at $8 to $10 with extra selects up to Beauty figures.

There is a big supply of peonies now and good ones are quoted at $3.00 to $5.00 a hundred with some extras at somewhat higher figures. But there is a great mass of poor stock that the dealers are glad to move at as low as $1.00 a hundred. Aside from peonies there seems to be practically no demand for outdoor flowers.

Lilies are meeting with very little if any demand though there is a liberal supply of good flowers. Some fine Cape Jasmynes are coming in now and they are offered at as low as 50 cents a hundred with few buyers. This is especially exasperating as had they been in for Decoration Day they could have been readily sold at $3.00 a hundred. Gladys Colville alba is being received and sells fairly well at $3.00 per 100.

The stretch of cool weather was broken last Monday and there was a quick shift to the other extreme. Tuesday and Wednesday the mercury was soaring into the nineties. On the whole trade is fully equal to that of last year though the big supply of poor grade goods makes an unpleasant glut that is difficult to handle. Fortunately shipping trade holds up well but local demand is very thin.

Club Meeting.

At the last meeting of the Florists' Club the entertainment committee reported the grounds on the Reissig estate at Riverside as the most desirable place for the proposed picnic and it was instructed to go ahead and complete arrangements. The electric cars go direct to the grounds. The committee will report the day and other details later.

There was some discussion of the ruling of the Board of Education forbidding the use of flowers at the closing exercises of the public schools but it did not appear that the club was in a position to take any effective action as a body. However some good will no doubt result indirectly from the discussion.

The committee on transportation to the Buffalo convention reported progress. The next meeting will be held June 21 and this will probably be the last for the season as the time for the annual summer vacation is at hand.

Various Items.

Solomon Garland, Sr., died at his home in Des Plaines last Thursday of pneumonia, aged 71 years. He was the father of W. S., Frank, Geo. M. and Solomon Garland, Jr., all in the trade, and the father-in-law of Fred Witthold. He was born at West Farms, N. Y., in 1830 and he removed with his parents to Chicago in 1843. The family settled in Winnetka in 1846 and here Mr. Garland was married, removing in 1861 to Des Plaines, where he has ever since resided. He engaged in farming and market gardening, later building greenhouses, and the sons are now all engaged in the growing of cut flowers except Geo. M., who is now manufacturing and selling the iron gutter invented by him. Mr. Garland retired from business five or six years ago and since then has spent the winters in Florida. He owned considerable property but as the title to same had been several years ago vested in his wife, who survives him, there is no change in title.

The wife of John Thorpe died last Saturday and the funeral was held Tuesday. The many friends of "Uncle John" will deeply sympathize with him in his affliction. Flowers were sent by many in the trade.

John Winterson, a brother of E. F. Winterson, of this city, who was in the service of a Pacific coast railway, was probably fatally injured in an accident at Walla Walla, Wash., last week. He lost both legs and an arm and a report of his death is hourly expected. Ed is getting it thick and fast lately. Soon after he learned of his brother's sad accident he received a telegram announcing that a sister was dying at her home in the west.

The greenhouses of Benthley & Co., at New Castle, Ind., are now all glazed and half of them are planted. They will be all in roses.

Among recent visitors were A. L. Glaser, Dubuque, Ia., and Henry Diers, Sibley, Ill.

Bassett & Washburn are beginning to cut bloom from their big house, 50x600, which they rebuilt and planted with roses for summer flowering. They included in this house a lot of the new Marquise Litta, which they find to be a splendid summer rose. In form and color it suggests the Beauty but it is a much better finished flower. The other roses in this house are La France, Kaiserin and Pres. Carnot.

Mr. G. Swenson, of Elmhurst, is sending in some remarkably fine candytuft of a new strain.

A team of florists stand a chance of getting their hair curled without charge in a game of baseball to be played with a team of barbers at West Harrison and 40th streets next Sunday afternoon. The florists will start from the corner of Wabash and Randolph at 2 p. m.

A BUNCH OF BOWLERS.

The accompanying engraving is from a flash-light photograph of the Chicago florists who are bowling in the series of league games now in progress.

The young man in the lower left-hand corner with his hair parted nearly amidship is John Degnan, the captain of the team of seedsmen. The score of his team are not parted so nearly in the middle as Johnny's hair. In fact Johnny has to carry the bulk of the load for his team. Next to the right in the front row is George Stollery, who is gaining a name for himself as a good bowler. Directly back of him is Jos. Foerster, whose average of 165 in fifteen games means good bowling. Directly back of him is George Stollery, who is gaining a name for himself as a 200 score on the board opposite and admiring its appearance. To the right of Mr. Foerster is Charley Hughes, who has a pretty ankle and don't care who knows it.

Back of the ball held by Mr. Hughes, with his face to the camera, is the captain of Napoleon White, is President P. J. Hauswirth, while in the front row to the right is Captain E. F. Winterson. Ed doesn't wear any bangs.

and the beatific expression on his open countenance is due to a beautiful vision in which the figures 300 are prominent. But it's only a vision. The gentleman at the extreme right, who wears hair at both ends of his face, and whose cigar is making such a violent effort to escape, is John Sterrett.

At the left in the second row is Fred Stolery, holding his knees firmly down with both hands. He had to hold himself that way to keep from getting up and making a strike between flashes. Next to the right is P. Matti, and next to him is N. A. Schmitz, the guardian of the pink orphan. The Sadowitz in the center with lock-stitched arms and fan-cy shirt front is Charley Balluff, and next beyond him is Ed Enders, also of the retailers, with that hundred dollar order angle to his eyes. Next is Oscar Kreitling, whose style is "O. K.," and at the end is the son of President Hanswirth.

At the left in the third row the glasses rest on the nose of Clifford Pruner, who probably never pruned anything in his life unless it was a baseball score or a wheat sheaf. Next is Mr. Duncan, of the seedsmen, and beyond him is C. J. Beardson, whose wife will undoubtedly read the riot act to him when she sees how handsome he is in this picture, and beyond him is W. Nagle.

George Amus is next, hitting the pipe with the same curve that he puts onto his strike balls. Next is Walter Kreitling, whose attention has been attracted by a hoarse call for "Zwei beer," and at the end is Walter Heffron and his football hair. He is the only player who has succeeded in getting over the foul line on two alleys at once. Of the two pated up against the wall the small edition is C. W. Scott and the larger one is John Paulus.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Trade Notes.

This has been the most unsatisfactory Memorial Day in recent years, as far as the florists are concerned. Usually there is an abundance of out-of-door stuff and there is enough to supply the demand at fair prices. This year there was practically nothing from outside, and consequently inside stuff was in great demand and prices jumped up nearly to Easter figures. Good carnations brought from 75 cents to $1.50 per dozen, and people were glad to get them. What few home grown paeonies were to be had brought 25 cents each, and so it went all the way through. One grower who is near one of the cemeteries says that he made up all his flowers into bouquets on the 29th, and on the morning of the 30th he began selling them at 50 cents each, but when he saw they were going pretty fast he began to raise, and kept on raising until he sold the last few at $1.50 each, and the people who paid the latter price were as well pleased as the first ones were.

Bedding out has been almost as brisk during the first week of this month as it was in May, owing to the strange weather in this section. Most of it is done now, but still there is here a bed and there a vase or box to fill, keeping the plantmen going a little while longer. Everybody has had a good spring trade and nearly all good stock has been disposed of at very fair prices.

The cut flower trade has held up remarkably well this spring and the usual number of June weddings, etc., will likely use up all the good stock right along. Roses are coming in mildewed, and poor in general, this having been a very trying spring on the rose growers. Carnations have not suffered so much as the roses, but they are a trifle smaller, all except Baur & Smith's E. Crocker, which are as large and as fine as ever.

Various Items.

Last Sunday a party of florists took advantage of a low rate excursion to Louisville, Ky. They visited several florist establishments and found things O. K., but the one thing they all talk about is their ramble through Cave Hill Cemetery. Superintendent Campbell took them through and all say that it is the finest of its kind they have ever seen.

Another party took advantage of a similar excursion to Lafayette, Ind., but I have not had a talk with any of them. Of course, they went to Dorners', and that means they had a good time.

On June 4 the State Florists' Association held its regular monthly meeting, with Vice-President Alley in the chair. The secretary read a communication from W. J. Stewart, secretary of the S. A. F. O. H., stating that that society wishes to offer through our society one silver and one bronze medal for any plant or variety of American origin not yet disseminated, and J. Hartje and A. F. J. Baur were appointed to award them at the fall show if anything worthy is shown. W. Billingley, J. Hartje and A. F. J. Baur were appointed a committee to arrange for the annual outing, which is to be held some time in July. There is to be a decided departure from the old arrangements and we hope it may work much good.

There was on exhibition three vases of fine Ethel Crocker carnations, by W. W. Coles, Kokomo, Bertermann Bros., and Baur & Smith. The latter also showed several seedlings which looked nice.

W. Beeman of Knightstown, was elected to membership. In my report of the last meeting I forgot to mention that Charles Riennan, of Connorsville, was elected to membership.

Harry Baisley was in town selling those red flower pots, and he visited the meeting. A. B.

THE SEEDSMEN held their annual convention at Rochester, N. Y., this week.

CINCINNATI

The Market.

The sun, which failed to make its appearance in time to open up flowers for Decoration Day, showed itself with interest as soon as that day was past. The result was another over-supply. The price of carnations started on the toboggan and finally sold as low as $5 per 1,000. The supply is still much larger than the demand, especially in the darker colors.

Many of the growers are sending in roses that are badly mildewed. Good roses still hold up to a fair price; those without mildew go at from $3 to .85. Paeonias came in with a rush and met with slow sale, at $1.50 to $2 per 100. They are almost gone now and sell better at from $2 to $3.

Sweet peas have been unusually scarce this spring. Up to the present time it has been almost impossible to fill orders. Now they are coming in in larger quantities and are of very good quality, 35 to 50 cents per 100 is the price. There is a good demand for long-stemmed American Beauties with but few to supply it; 15 to 25 cents is obtained for the few to be had and they are nothing extra.

The combined commencement of all the high schools, which occurred last Friday evening, used up a large number of flowers. This helped to relieve the glutted condition of the market a great deal and by Saturday the wholesale houses were fairly well cleaned up.

Various Items.

The Cincinnati Florists' Society held its annual meeting Saturday evening. The election of officers for the coming year was in order with the following result: A. Sunderbruch, president; Gus Adrian, vice president; F. Ball, secretary; Ben George, treasurer; H. Schwartz, director.

Chas. Jones reported that the fall festival committee has decided to appropriate $400 to be divided into prizes for best general display of flowers during the fall festival, which occurs in September. Though this is a pretty bad time for a display of flowers, yet it will pay the boys to look out for it a little.

A letter from Anderson & White, Lexington, Ky., says that they had a narrow escape at the time of the big fire in that city the past week. As luck would have it, though, they pulled through with but slight loss.

The Cincinnati Cut Flower Co. have added another room to their present quarters.

A man was caught in the city parks breaking down rose bushes and making off with the blooms. He is now serving a sentence of four months ($50 and costs) in the work house. Such work on the part of the police authorities is bound to bring protection to the plants in the parks.

C. J. OHMER.

ROCKFORD, ILL.—J. J. Soper, the florist, was quite badly injured by a fall from his bicycle on May 31st. The fork of the bicycle broke and Mr. Soper struck the brick pavement full on his face.

SEDALIA, Mo.—Archia's Seed Store received an extended notice in the Sedalia Democrat of May 26. The business was established in 1884 and the proprietors are L. H. and E. Archia. They have done a splendid business this season.

DENVER, COLO.Marriage of Philip Scott.

That redoubtable ten pin champion, Philip Scott, has been bowled out. He is no longer a bachelor privileged to frequent the alleys at will, but must now ask permission of his wife and will in future probably be restricted to two hours once in two weeks, and the Denver team's hopes of achieving distinction at Buffalo have gone glimmering.

Miss Simpkins, who is now Mrs. Scott, had already been with the Park Floral Co. several years when Philip first landed in Denver. In the year and a half since that time he has had ample opportunity to see her under all the trying conditions that arise in a retail store. He held out manfully, but had to surrender at last. The wedding took place on the evening of June 4th at the home of the bride's parents in Berkeley and Ben Bolit fairly outdid himself in the decorating. "Billy Crowe," also with the Park Floral, devoted the whole afternoon to the creation of the bouquets and Peter Crowe of Utica sent some of his famous "Bardi" adiantum for the occasion. The bride was showered with gifts galore, and it was evident that both bride and groom were great favorites with their fellow employees and with Mr. Valentine, their "old man."

If Willie and Davie will now follow Philip's lead, "Great Scott" may, in a measure, be consoled when the time comes for him to surrender his charming daughter. Judging from appearances it is only a question of when one she will select from among the many. In the meantime here's to the health and happiness of Philip and his bride. Drink hearty. J.

GREENFIELD, MASS.—E. B. Beals is closing out the stock in his greenhouses here and will remove to Springfield, where he has bought the Eastern avenue greenhouses and of which he takes possession July 1. He has been in the florist business in this city for the last 20 years.

THE HOLLYHOCK.

Those who possess a collection of hollyhocks should place them (March) in a greenhouse orinery. The hollyhock is regarded mostly as a hardy plant, and therefore not in need of glass protection. I tried, at one time, to treat it as such, but found to my cost that it would not stand severe frosts. Seedlings will pass through a severe winter without harm if they are well established. For instance, sow the seed early in the month of May in a cold frame, or on a gentle bottom heat, to cause a quicker and better germination. When the plants have been pricked out in boxes, and are large enough in the months of July or August, plant them at not less than three feet apart, and they will be fine, sturdy plants, with the leaves hugging the ground. Such plants will stand almost any amount of frost.

The older plants which have flowered and have been cut down are different. There is an old thick stem on these, with some growth clustering around the neck, and this stem dies down from the top, after exposure to severe frost; and as the outer covering of the stem parts from the woody portion, the growths gradually die with it. A good way to treat old stools of the hollyhock is to dig them up, and plant in an ordinary garden-frame in rich loamy soil, and if some leaf-mould can be mixed with it to keep it open, so much the better. They may be planted quite closely together, and have a covering of litter if very severe frosts set in.

Choice varieties may be potted in 7 or 8-inch pots, according to the size of the stools; and as the object is to obtain cuttings, they can be more quickly obtained from plants that have been wintered in a glasshouse, from which the frost is kept out better than from a frame. When the shoots are strong enough, they should be cut off with a knife close to the main stem, taking a heel of the older tissue as well. Such cuttings form roots freely in a propagating-frame or heated house, but they are apt to rot unless the right method is pursued. Let as many clean thumb-pots be prepared as there are cuttings, and having put a bit of crock over the hole, and prepare some porous soil consisting of one part good loam, one of leaf-mould, and some white sand, all being moderately moist, and plant these cuttings firmly in the pots, but do not afford water; indeed, it is better not to afford any before roots are formed, which is the reason that the soil should be rather moist, for if the pots are plunged in moist cocoanut-fibre-refuse over mild bottom-heat, the moisture will be retained for two or three weeks, as the cuttings are, of course, in a glass-case inside of the house. The frame should not be quite closed, or decay in the leaves and also in the stem may sometimes be set up. It is very essential that decayed parts should be promptly removed when noticed.

Root-grafting may be successfully practiced in the spring, the stock and scion being prepared as if for whip-grafting, and they are carefully fitted, and tied firmly with raffia. A short piece of a root is used for the stock, and in potting the graft the top of the root must be covered with the soil, which should be the same sandy, light soil as that used for the cuttings. When fairly established, these young hollyhock plants must be gradually inured to the temperature of a cold frame when all danger from frost is over, and repotted into 5 or 6-inch pots. In order that the best results may be obtained, the plants must be carefully attended to, and placed in the open air in April, and planted out where they are to stand to flower about the end of that month or early in the next. The stations or the bed should be prepared in the autumn by being trenched, and heavily manured. In planting either hollyhocks or dahlias where they are to flower, it is better to at once put in the stakes to which they plants, and a saving of trouble in the end. At the time of planting, make the hole large enough to hold a spadeful or two of a good compost—say, of loam and decayed manure in equal portions, with manure between the first and second spits. Plant firmly and rather make a slight depression round the plants than a hillock, as in dry seasons water must be afforded.

In new ground that has not had the benefit of trenching, it will not do to throw the subsoil on to the top, but to stir it up, and mix plenty of good manure with it. Many persons do not realize the importance of garden ground being well aerated before being planted with anything, either flowering plants or vegetables. Suppose the ground has been trenched in October or November, it will soon have the surface battered down with the rain, and thus rendered impervious to the air, and weeds will appear on it; and the proper sort of treatment is to fork it over to the depth of four inches, and in about six weeks fork it up again; but it is better to let it alone until the surface is fairly dry. It may also be forked over at the time of planting, and if some decayed manure be placed around the roots of the plants, it will have a very beneficial effect on them.—J. Douglas, in the Gardeners' Chronicle, London.

GREENHOUSE GRAPES.

I would suggest to R. S. C. that he bend the last year's growth down, which will induce all of the lower eyes to start freely. Afterward the vines may be straightened out again. I have always found common cow manure the best fertilizer for the borders and beds, both inside and outside. F. J. ULBRECHT.

ORANGE, N. J.

Mr. William Duckham, of Madison, addressed his friends of the N. J. F. S. at their regular monthly meeting on June 5 upon "Some New Varieties of Plants," prefacing his remarks with the regret that the indispensable cut flowers had displaced those plants, once the joy of every horticulturist and known as regular stove or greenhouse plants. Among those mentioned and described were: Areca Hilsemannii, Kentias Kusnetiana and Sanderiana, Licuala Jeanencyi, Linosydisi Petrickiana, Salmea Lancheana, Ludovia crenifolia, Draecenas Cantlaya and Victoria, Coleus thrysioides and the new heliconias, which the speaker saw in England last fall, all of which he asserted were of great beauty and merited being extensively grown and would be when once they were more generally known.

Favorable reports were received from those co-operating with the society in their distribution of plants among the school children and the treasurer reported further donations of money since last meeting, which would cover all estimated expense attending this department of the society's work.

Resolutions condemning the wholesale destruction of trees upon the streets by telephone and telegraph companies ordered at the last meeting and adopted and their publication ordered after first soliciting co-operation of other civic societies.

On motion the next meeting will be held June 20 instead of June 27 and a rose and strawberry show will be held the same evening.

Mr. Mooney, of Hastings, delivered a lecture on dracaenas and the discussion that followed was participated in by Messrs. Scott, Cockburn, Mooney and others. Mr. Mooney was given a vote of thanks for his lecture.

Various Notes.

When trade is satisfactory and the sun shines brightly, man's wants from a business point of view ought to be pretty well supplied. The last week in May saw the closing of our schools and this, together with Decoration Day trade gave the florist plenty to do. The American Beauty was a favorite with the graduate at the commencement exercises this year. The giving of flowers on such occasions is evidently growing in favor here, the call being mostly for bunches of long-stemmed roses. The quality of the limited amount of home grown stock is as good as could be expected in this hot and dry climate.

Outside sweet peas are beginning to bloom but the handles are so short they can only be disposed of in design work.

J. F. Wilcox, Council Bluffs, Iowa, is sending some fine stock to this market, especially in American Beauties. They can not be duplicated here. Perfect bloom and foliage, and he knows how to pack them.

Society is doing its duty to the florist and the usual quota of events and weddings for this month are announced. A sweet pea decoration in which several thousand blooms were used was arranged by Arthur Newell last week. These flowers were shipped in from Chicago and received in splendid condition. Arthur is strictly up-to-date in the fashions and is wearing the shirt waist this summer.

When last seen by the writer W. L. Rock was the busiest florist in town with decorative work, having three large orders in one week. His new store is complete with modern fixtures, painted in white, and a 14-foot window gives Willie an opportunity to display original skill.

We are glad to announce that our able park superintendent, Mr. George Kessler, has been reappointed for another term of years.

W. J. Barnes secured the contract from the city for planting the pascos and parks with the summer bedding. H. J. M.

DU BOIS, PA.

The James Bros. erected a greenhouse on the property on South ave. and have grown a considerable quantity of vegetable plants and bedding stock this last winter. They are well pleased with the trade and contemplate enlarging their plant to double its present capacity this fall. They are near the churches and school buildings, as well as the cemeteries, and their central location makes it a good stand for trade direct from the greenhouse. Thomas, the oldest brother, has invested $200 in a nice horse for the delivery wagon, and it is a beauty. Go ahead, Tom, an. good luck!

Decoration Day trade was good, notwithstanding the heavy rains during the week. GENISTA.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—The weather has been such that everything in the plant line is one or two weeks behind. We had such a long cold, wet spell during April and May that nothing either out of doors or in is up to the standard. Coleus, salvias, etc., would not grow and even pansies are behind. We look for better things now that we have some sunshine again.

WHITE GOLDEN GATE!! WHITE GOLDEN GATE!!

This GREAT PRIZE WINNER SPORT from PINK GOLDEN GATE will not be sold to the trade until APRIL, 1902. It has won Prizes and Certificates wherever exhibited.

We want you to buy this rose in LARGE QUANTITY next year. You will do this if you KNOW it is the BEST WHITE ROSE. It is what you KNOW, not what the other fellow SAYS. You can KNOW in advance of purchasing. How? By buying a few PINK GOLDEN GATE plants from ourselves or some other grower and testing them this season. We will sell you ONE HUNDRED PINK GOLDEN GATES, five months' old plants, not weak, measly, late-rooted cuttings, for TWO DOLLARS!! Sample plant mailed for ten cents. Not more than one hundred plants will be sold to a single grower, as our stock for sale is limited to about ten thousand plants.

After ten years' struggle PINK GOLDEN GATE is today the most popular and the most profitable rose in commerce. Every grower of it is increasing the number of plants in his benches. You will, therefore, be testing at a very low cost a rose with an established record, and not an UNTRIED seedling at a FANCY price. The average rose grower will never again be flim flammed with fake roses. If the PINK GOLDEN GATE suits you after this trial we KNOW you will buy the WHITE SPORT OF GOLDEN GATE next year because you will KNOW it is the BEST WHITE ROSE for forcing purposes.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

Various Notes.

Trade is not brisk by any means. The spring planting is about over and still there are plants on the benches. We walked into a store last week and saw 2 1/2-in geraniums, tall, lean and lanky, by the hundred, in bloom, marked: "Your choice, 5 cents." We thought, "Well, they are not worth more, but why raise such stuff and annoy the other fellow who raises good goods."

We called at Marshall's the other day and found him as lousy as ever. His field ornamentals are looking fine, especially when one considers the backward spring. Since my call at Mr. Marshall's I learn that he has taken a well earned rest at Lake Okibaji, where he hauled in a 34-inch pike. Now this isn't a fish story.

I saw in your last issue that you had information from Des Moines that the Park Board had appropriated $12,000 for trees and shrubbery. I am gardener in one of the parks and our club president, Lambert, is custodian of the other, and we have seen nothing of them. I think if your informant had left off about three naughts from the right hand side of the figure he would have been nearer correct.

Our parks are looking very well this spring. One noticeable feature of bedding at Union Park is a calendar of alternantheras, which marks the light of time and attracts attention and brings comments from the visitors. One comment recently heard from one of the park hands was that "it was all right, but it would be better if the gardener would only move it ahead three or four days, so that pay day would come sooner." J. T. D. F.

JOHN EVANS GETS IT.

Mr. Challenge Ventilator Evans, of Richmond, Ind., will soon be sent to the new United States prison at Atlanta, Ga. This will no doubt be sad news to his many friends among the florists, and we hasten to add that he will be released as soon as he has put in 100 of his ventilating machines which have been purchased by the government through Messrs. Griffiths, Wells & Griffiths, the Chicago contractors. It appears that a fine finish cannot be put upon specimen transgressors of the law, without good ventilation, and that's where John comes in—but he don't stay in.

DUQUE, IA.—A. L. Glaser, who bought out Nicholas Mettel last February, will rebuild one house 16x65 and will build three new houses 20x85. Also a glass entrance and show place 20x35. This will give him a total of over 12,000 feet of glass. The new houses are for cut flowers. Mr. Glaser reports business excellent this spring. Had a big trade for Decoration Day. Mr. Mettel has retired from the business entirely.

The annual flower festival of the city of Cologne on the Rhine three years ago has developed into an important event. A young lady relative of the immortal Goethe has been chosen flower queen. The festival is a feast of flowers and poetry. The prizes to the writers of the best verses are elaborate floral arrangements.

CLOSED OUT ALL STOCK.

A few words in regard to your classified ads. Last year, late in the season, we had a surplus stock of some considerable thousands of asters on hand, and had about concluded the season was over, but your classified ads, coming to our notice, although we are rather conservative in regard to new things, we concluded to try them, as the rates were so reasonable that there could not be but a small loss if we received no returns. The effect was that we closed out all the stock and returned some cash to customers whose orders we could not fill.—A. & G. ROSBACH, Pemberton, N. J., June 11, 1900.

THE FLORISTS' MANUAL.
A Reference Book for Commercial Florists

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

School Closings.

School graduating or commencement time, which occurs the latter part of June, deserves very serious consideration by every florist in the country. Times ago it was made more of a floral feast than it is today. To our mind, school graduating time could and should be made the occasion of a great floral display, and it needs but a little energy and some show of encouragement to accomplish wonders in that direction. There is scarcely a village, town or city where the school could not be made the scene of some kind of a flower show on the last day at school. This would do more good than offering free flower shows and scientific papers to a few staid old people or enthusiasts, such as is the average attendance at the monthly gatherings of many horticultural societies of today. It seems to us that the public school yard affords a greater field for doing good than the college campus; for it deserves more consideration, for it is the greatest factor in the development of the country and its resources.

Our mind's eye is looking back to a recent show held at the New York Botanical gardens. There four small children exhibited a collection of wild flowers that exceeded in beauty all the other exhibits; it was an object lesson to the oldest gardener attending. How much of such valuable work could be done almost everywhere with simple lessons in botany that would attract closer and indestructible friendships originating with child life and wayside flowers? It is ridiculous for any florist to try and convince himself that his business can ever be separated from sentiment, because his business depends on that often fickle ingredient of human makeup. A flower given to a child can never produce an unpleasant impression in the mind of that child's parents, and our dealings with the schools can but produce a similar mark on the public.

We advocate giving special inducements for school trade which comes at a time when all kinds of flowers are so abundant that many of them find their way to the wholesaler's rubbish box, or at best scarcely pay for their expressage. Now is the time when even the cheapest kind of work can be made up at a profit. Many who come to your store asking for the most expensive flowers would be far more satisfied could they be assured that a larger display of cheaper flowers would not only be more to the purpose but more satisfactory, and more important still, to their pocket.

A well-arranged basket or bunch would do more than all verbal arguments, and in almost every place it would be advisable to make up a few special school baskets. No need for expensive baskets, that is where mistakes are made. The cheapest you can get in plain colors, with high and low handles, these should be twisted with ribbon and on the bow streamers at one side you can paint the name of the intended recipient with date, etc. Blue and pink ribbons are the favorites with the majority of children. Red, white and blue flowers can be put in a basket trimmed with blue ribbons, but the same cannot be done where pink is used. An unlimited number of styles and combinations can be made without transgressing the laws of good taste; almost any kind or color of flowers can be used providing they are arranged in clusters and with a proper regard to color harmony. Simple flowers and simple arrangements are most consistent with school life, but ribbons, and an abundance of them, can be used in this class of work, for girls especially are mostly passionately fond of ribbons and there is an added attraction about them when they are commemorative of their graduating days.

The greatest care should be taken in making your show piece or sample basket of one color, and better still, one kind of flower, and it will catch the public eye quicker if the basket be entirely covered with silk; surah silk and taffeta ribbons always match well. Satin ribbon is not appropriate unless it be of the very narrow sizes. Wreaths of roses will also form a beautiful feature of this year's exercises; they must be made very light to wear on the head, and be tied in the back with a rosette or bow of very narrow ribbon. Large, loose bunches of roses, carnations and mixed flowers can be made up very attractively, but roses will always lead in popularity, and with the great crop of outdoor flowers this year there is no reason that with the lateness of the season the greatest satisfaction cannot be given on even the smallest order.

We feel it is unnecessary to enumerate the hundred and one different things that can be done. There is no need to hunt up the rarest flowers in the orchid house for school purposes, for they cannot be expected to be appreciated at anything like their value, and they are, if anything, more out of place there, even where there is an inclination to exact the highest price from a customer—'twere better to suggest quality in roses. There is no sense in recommending extraordinary size in anything sent as a compliment to a graduate, for in very few cases it is possible to employ carriages, and in many more respects heavy, clumsy baskets are more of a nuisance than a pleasure. The small low handle basket or the bunch are most appropriate.

In many colleges and classes they have specially recognized colors, and it is the duty of every florist to not only be acquainted with these colors but to give them prominence whenever possible, by doing so you show a compliment which rarely fails to give satisfaction. There can be no half-way colors or compromises in your dealings with organized bodies; you must make your selections in daylight and with the most critical regard to what is right. There can be no place for horseshoes or any kind of set designs in school floral work, and no matter how great the pressure, try to escape being guilty of instilling into the youthful mind unpleasant or superstitious impressions. In the play called "Capt. Jinks" the author has intentionally given the florist's trade one of the greatest satirical blows we know of. The silliness and inappropriateness of floral designs are shown in the most humiliating style; possibly they may be improved on when reviewed, but as we saw them they were awful.

We once attended the opening of the United States Senate, and we must say we have often seen better taste displayed in the designs sent to the opening of some politician's rum shop. Horseshoes may be very suitable when used in connection with the race track, but they scarcely look in the right place on the desks of the Senate at Washington. The same may be said of harps, lyres, stars and the many funny things seen there. No doubt ignorant politicians are responsible in a way, yet they are not altogether to blame. Some florists we know have a craze for set designs, they delight in the manufacture of incongruous things and would consider it entirely wrong to talk a customer out of ordering such; so it is with the galax-leaf fiend who is so acutely afflicted that he can see nothing else and recommends them for all occasions. They are both enemies to the advancement of floriculture.

Your arrangement of flowers intended for school purposes should be specially educational. You need not be an authority on harmony of color to do what is right. Your safest plan is to avoid artificiality as much as possible. Flowers are beautiful in themselves; it is only our duty to do our best to arrange them so they can display all their charms, but a more important matter than their artistic arrangement is their profuse dissemination. Every class room in every school should have its vase of flowers, especially on the closing day. Children have retentive memories, and the future of the florists' trade depends on their continuing to love flowers. Some effort should be made every June to ease some of the millions of wasted flowers cast some pleasure and much educational influence on at least the poor children of every city's slums. No possible estimate can be placed on the great good they would do. Try it, as we have done, and the memory will remain well alive.

IVERA.

DISEASED GERANIUMS.

Last year about 25 per cent of my single Grant geraniums became diseased—that is, the leaves were deformed and they did not throw any flower spike, and this year 75 per cent are affected the same way, while about 20 per cent of my double Grants came blind. Last year we put in a new stock of Grant, but they have proved worse instead of better, while the other varieties are all right. The soil is all the same and the Grants are fine bushy plants of good color, but they will not bloom. Can some one tell me what the trouble is?

D. H. C.

I don't think there is anything the matter with the soil. I have seen single Grants get into this flowerless state. A few other varieties are liable to get some trouble with the foliage. One of the worst is Emile d'Girardin, which we have discarded because so large a proportion came this way. Briefly, I will say that geraniums should at all times have a rather heavy loam, be firmly potted, and at all times have the very lightest of houses. It is useless to propagate from stock that is affected in this way. Throw it away and begin with something new and healthy, and propagate from flowering shoots always and no other. There are so many good geraniums that will flower in spite of any bad treatment that it is not worth while growing varieties that are inclined to be affected with this trouble, which is, I have no doubt, bacteria.

WM. SCOTT.

in this way and they also come in for propagating as you can give them a rest during the winter months.

Ampelopsis.

In some parts of the country there is yet a great demand for Ampelopsis Veitchii, but it is surprising how many visitors to this city, particularly from the west, ask us what that vine is that is seen on so many houses. It may not be hardy in extreme northern states, but with us it is perfectly hardy and after once getting hold of the wall no more attention is ever needed, except to keep it from covering the windows.

I have often recommended your sowing the seed in the spring. I hope you did so, as we find seedlings just as good as the plants raised from cuttings. We have a number now in 2-in. pots which we shall soon put into 4-inch and support them with a stick and grow them inside. They make good, strong plants by September, when they should be put into a frame and hardened off. You are sure to have some spare bench room and they will make far better growth inside than out. Don't make the mistake of keeping them indoors until November and then putting them out suddenly to get a hard frost, for although a hardy plant they won't stand that and a cold-frame is the right place to winter them. Wherever new houses are being built there will be a demand for this hardy climber.

Cyclamen.

When next winter comes you may or may not regret that you have neglected your cyclamen, which is almost unequalled as a winter blooming plant. If you have passed through the last month without neglecting them there is no excuse after this. The firms that grow the

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Smilax.

If you grow smilax you should plant every season. You may have a bed looking very well just now and you may think it is a shame to throw it away, but if you don't you will regret it before the season is over. I have always recommended planting smilax as early in July as possible and then, with good management and sufficient heat, not less than 60 degrees at night, you ought to be able to cut four crops; one in October, another at Christmas, another at Easter and the final one in summer before you throw the old bed away. Smilax does well if grown in six or eight inches of soil, and the soil should be a heavy loam, well enriched. I have tried it in a sandy soil and it was by no means as good as the heavy loam. Smilax needs no fine built houses because light is not essential, but heat you should have or it is unprofitable.

Asparagus.

You may be planting Asparagus plumosus this year. Some years ago I learned to my sorrow that it is a great mistake to plant asparagus in anything but mother earth. Don't have a plank or anything between the soil and the ground. I would not say that asparagus has to be planted every year, yet I believe there is more profit in the new bed the first year than there is any succeeding year. Sixty degrees at night suits asparagus very well and it deserves a better house than smilax. The principal thing is plenty of head room or you do not get the long strings. We now sow a few thousand seed every spring which we use for ferneries. There is nothing better than a small plant in a 2½ or 3-inch pot for a fernery. It will outlast many of the ferns and is always graceful and pretty.

Begonias.

You will soon have time, I trust, to pot up and take care of the flowering begonias that were propagated in March or April. We find many of the species of begonias amongst the most useful plants for sale in the fall when people want something for their conservatories and there is no better plant for the house or small conservatory than several of the showy begonias. Some of them want pinching till about August and then should be allowed to grow naturally and are then in fine condition in October and November.

Cannas.

Cannas seem to have sold this year better than ever and I see no reason why they should ever lose their popularity for they are about the finest decorative plants we have for the grounds. Many of you will have sold out of good varieties. It is much cheaper to buy now if possible and grow them yourself than it is to wait and buy the stock next winter. Give them a good, deep, rich soil where you can get at them with the hose, as they delight in plenty of water and you want to raise as large a root as possible. We usually pot up a number of cannas after the busy season is over, say three plants in a 10-inch pot, and grow them in the houses. For a cheap decoration during September and October there is nothing finer than a well grown canna and they are a change from the everlasting palm. You can use them largest specimens give them a mild hot-bed during the summer. If you will be sure and never neglect them in this position there is no doubt but what you can get a larger plant, but you can grow as good cyclamen in light houses where there is abundance of ventilation. I would advise always to have the pots planted during summer if kept on a bench.

Cypripedium Parviflorum.

The greatest enemy is green fly. There never should be any let-up in fumigating and to help this some tobacco stems strewn among the leaves will be a great preventive of green fly. A light syringing should be given every morning and by no means ever let them suffer severely for want of water. Once thoroughly dried out to extreme and it is all off. Constant waterings is the secret of growing good cyclamen as it is with many other plants.

Pelargoniums.

It is a long time since I have said anything about the show pelargoniums, but a splendid exhibit by C. W. Ward at the Pan-American, which has attracted a great deal of attention, makes me believe that these plants will come again into fashion. We grew them by the thousand twenty-five years ago and made money by it; then for years we could scarcely sell one and the last two or three years I have even been discouraged because people will not give any more for them than they will for a zonal geranium. In a few weeks their bloom will be gone, but they have been gorgeous for the past month.

If you grow any, as soon as they are out of bloom they should be kept rather on the dry side after the first of July till the end of August or beginning of September, when the old plants should be cut severely down; that is, cut down to within a few eyes of last year's growth. They will break out and make a growth where no buds are seen. I will have something to say about their propagation later. In the meantime after the flower is entirely gone keep them rather on the dry side.

Fuchsias.

Don't forget to select a couple of plants of the best varieties of your best fuchsias and shift them if they need it and plunge them out of doors. You will need them for stock plants next winter.

Mignonette.

If you grow mignonette it will soon be time to think about sowing the seed. I believe in sowing it early in July. Undoubtedly a solid bed in a cool, light house is the ideal way to grow it, but if this is not convenient it will grow in five or six inches of soil well enough for all purposes. The mignonette does not transplant very well, but if carefully done it is all right. You can, however, either sow a few seeds in the bed and when they are up select the strongest or you can sow a few seeds in a 2-inch pot and thin them out and transplant the best later. One foot apart is plenty close enough for each plant. Why you should sow early is because it pays better at Christmas than any time and if you don't get the seed in July you will not have good spikes by Christmas.

The Boston Fern.

There is no doubt the Boston fern is among the most beautiful plants of recent introduction. We never seem to have enough. There seems to be a change in the method of growing. The best growers now do not plant it out; they have a few of the plants on a bench and from these take the runners. But the plants intended for sale next winter are better grown in pots. Give them a rich soil and plenty of pot room and do not give them a shaded house. A very slight shade will not hurt them but they will stand the broad sun if well supplied with water. You cannot fill your spare benches with anything more profitable than the Boston fern.

Palms.

Florists who raise a few palms should have time very soon to give them the very best of attention. They may have been crowded while your houses were full of bedding plants but now they should be given a good place and plenty of room. Shift if needed and keep well syringed.

While the kentia, the most beautiful palm, will easily burn under poor glass they should only have shade sufficient to prevent burning. The kentias we too often see drawn up by being grown in a great heat and crowded. Give your plants plenty of room while you are at it and they will broaden out and make better plants than you can buy.

It pays well to put all your young palms in a house by themselves. On dull, cold days or cold nights you can have a little fire, which will help them very much. I do not mean by this a heat that is going to force them up, but just enough to keep a nice warm circulation about them.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

THE SMALLER YELLOW LADY'S SLIPPER.

(Cypripedium parviflorum Salisb.)

The early settlers of this country gave a much more expressive and appropriate name to this pretty orchid. They called it the Moccasin Flower, from an Algonquin word for the usual footwear of the red man, which the strange flower greatly resembles in shape and color. Perhaps the Indians themselves gave the flower this name, and that it was adopted by the whites. However the name originated, its fitness is at once apparent to any one who ever saw a moccasin.

That this interesting plant and its larger fellow Cypripedium pubescens, can be successfully grown in the garden is proved by the group in the illustration. Last year it had four or five fine blooms; this spring it produced a dozen! Unless they receive protection in suitable locations these rare and beautiful plants will speedily become extinct in this region. Like the Indian and the bison, they will become only a tradition. Chicago. JOHN HIGGINS.

LILIUM RUBELLUM.

I send herewith a photograph showing five spikes of Liliun rubellum, which were cut on May 15, from plants growing here on my lily farm. The bulbs of these lilies were only the remainder or refuse of our last year's exports, and I was surprised to get such lovely flowers from these shrivelled up bulbs.

Liliun rubellum grows here in the northern part of the Island of Nippon, from whence come all the rubellum bulbs which are exported. Needless to say the climate there is much cooler than here in Yokohama, and therefore these lilies are particularly well adapted for our home climate. Mr. Peter Barr, the famous narcissus cultivator of London, who, during his stay in Japan made a special study of the same, in a letter to me says:

"When in New York, 1898, I saw 'The Garden' plate of this lily and thought it a form of Lilium Krameri, but since seeing Lilium rubellum flowering in Japan I consider it a good species and am sure it will be extensively cultivated when better known and its culture understood. I cannot conceive of anything more beautiful than a 5-inch pot with three plants of this lovely lily in flower in the month of April or early in May. It is one of the earliest lilies, flowering a month earlier than Lilium Krameri. It grows about one foot high, compact and elegant, the color of the flower is more or less that of Lilium Krameri but the height is about one-third and the leaves shorter and paler green.

"I feel, therefore, no hesitation in recommending that Lilium rubellum in pots should be grown in poor, stony, sandy loam with at least two inches of drainage, and very judiciously watered from the time of potting. The soil must be kept moist but never wet and success will be sure to follow. Out of doors I would recommend a northern or eastern aspect and failing this, plant under deciduous bushes where the roots in winter will keep the bulbs comparatively dry and shade the plants from the hot sunshine in April and May.

"I think you should caution your clients against exposing the bulb to a dry atmosphere; the scales are thin and soon shrivel, therefore if they cannot be potted up or planted out at once, they should be buried in dry soil or placed out of doors in a northern aspect where they will take no injury from the weather and the bulb kept plump."

ALFRED UNGER.

Yokohama, Japan.

CARNATION NOTES.

Cultivating.

I have had occasion several times to speak of cultivating the carnations in the field, but now that the weather is quite hot and we are likely to have a long dry spell at any time I want to remind you of the importance of keeping the cultivator going. Cultivate after every rain just as soon as the soil is fit to work and if it does not rain for a week or more go through them again at least once each week.

Don't get the idea into your head that the soil will not bake except after a rain if it is not cultivated. You need only examine the soil to see your mistake; you will notice a hard dry crust all over the surface after several hot days after you cultivated them and especially is this true if you worked the soil when it was just a trifle wet, but even if the soil was in good condition a week of hot sunshine will take all the moisture out of the top inch or so and a crust is formed, though not as hard as if the soil had been wet. This crust must be kept broken up, the oftener the better. Keeping the surface loose allows the moisture to come up from the bottom and to rise up in the air to keep the atmosphere in a good growing state.

Plants need moisture in the air; they breathe just as well as they do in the soil around the roots. Have you never noticed how much cooler it seemed in the field just after you finished cultivating and how much fresher the plants looked? A good cultivating is as beneficial as a good watering. Go over first with the hoe several times in a season and hoe out the weeds from between the plants and loosen the soil right in the row where the cultivator can't reach. Be careful not to throw the soil up around the plants as it will cause stem rot.

Look after the pinching closely so none of the plants are allowed to grow straggly. Some varieties will not need topping any more, while others will need it for some time yet. You must study your varieties and stop topping the late bloomers soon, as late topping will cause them to come into crop late in the fall, but keep all blooming shoots off of them until you house them in the fall.

A. F. J. BAUER.

SHIPPING PLANTS.

There are lots of people all over the country in the wholesale florist business who at times have to send out plants to fill the many orders they receive. Wouldn't it be rather a wise thing on their part to send them in light boxes, strong enough to be safe, but not built of old flooring boards, 2x4 scantlings and spikes? Express companies in their requirements that the plants shall be properly boxed and crated don't say that you shall build bull-proof fences around the plants to insure the 20 per cent discount, so that cannot be used as an excuse for the extraordinary packing that is done, not by small concerns, but some of the largest concerns in the country. Any old box will do to ship in provided the party ordering has sent the money with his order and has no recourse against the shipper except to write a letter to him, and if the shipper feels like answering it at some future date, he does so, but in the majority of cases the letter goes into the waste basket, with the remark that "that fellow is either a crank or a kicker."

When express charges run up in the neighborhood of $2 per 100, it is not a pleasant thing to find that the box weighs about double the amount of the plants. If the shipper would consider the time wasted in building these bull-proof cases and the amount of nails put into each one, he would find it would have been much cheaper to have secured a light, practical box for his shipping. There is no large center in the country but where there is a dealer in second-hand boxes, who will furnish any quantity of light boxes, well made, so that there can be no excuse made that they could not get boxes.

If this little note as to the building these styles of boxes would strike some of our big shippers, it would save a great deal of unnecessary cursing by the little florists who have to pay the express charges on yellow pine and scantlings. Piano boxes are good enough to ship pianos in, and do well for heavy machinery when not used for pianos, but they are mighty costly things to ship plants in when the express charges are counted in at rates of from $1.50 per 100 pounds up.

BOXES.

BUFFALO.

We have had a week of very fine warm weather good for everybody. The plant business is growing to a close and it has been a good one. I think everybody is satisfied. There has been a great demand for palms for summer decoration.

There has been undoubtedly a good demand for all kinds of flowers and they are well cleaned up at the end of every day. Sweet peas seem about the only flower that seems to be too abundant. Mr. C. F. Christensen contributed to the stock of plants this year and, considering the late beginning he had, succeeded in working up a splendid stock of geraniums and other bedding plants. On raising good market plants he is a past master.

Our parks have still enlarged the area of flower gardening and Capt. Braik turned out a great lot of plants. We think, however, the one in supreme command has chosen some spots for isolated flower beds that would have looked better if left with the green sward. A little circle a half mile away from another bed looks forlorn and should be very large to be effective.

The nurserymen's convention at Niagara Falls on Wednesday and Thursday last brought a good many to our city and to the Pan-American. I regret I missed several who favored me with a call. Mr. Nelson Bogue, of Batavia, was well pleased with his beds of roses. Mr. Meehan, Jr., of Germantown, Pa.; L. C. Bobbink, of Rutherford, N. J.; James W. Withers, of New York; Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Mr. Duncan, representing Parsons & Son; Mr. Carl Cropp, of Chicago; F. J. Rumpelton, of Ridge-wood, N. J.; and many others escaped me.

Pan-American Notes.

The advent of real summer weather has much increased the attendance and you now see people from every state of this big country. Very little remains to be done and that little mostly around the territory devoted to the different state buildings. The dedication of several of them the past week were grand affairs for those participating. Mexico opened up in grand style and so did Michigan. Today the New England building opens up with a reception and a very beautiful place it is. There have been several additions to the outside displays and a few days more will see every bed filled.

The Spanish Iris exhibited by Clucas & Boddington are just opening. They are beautiful and orchid-like flowers. The hybrid roses planted by Ellwanger & Barry and Nelson Bogue, about 4,000 bushes of all the leading varieties, are just opening a grand lot of buds and will be very attractive for the next two or three weeks. Conard & Jones, of West Grove, Pa., have planted two large beds of cannas. W. Atlee Burpee & Co., of Philadelphia, have several beds of begonia of the Vernon type and some new varieties of coleus. John N. May, a bed of summer blooming roses. Henry A. Dreer has added more beds to their already large exhibit, among others a fine lot of Hydrangea paniculata. J. C. Vaughan has filled seven or eight beds with new cannas and a fine bed of Sonpert roses, also one of St. Louis salvia, said to be very fine. Mr. Heinrich, who has worked very hard over the large display of Peter Henderson & Co., has about got things in shape. It is a fine and well laid out plot and shows off most everything in the way of implements needed for the maintenance of a garden and one carpet bed. The Chadborn Ventilating Co. have just completed the ventilation in the north conservatory. Their automatic system can be seen working in perfect order.

There is good opportunity here to make the acquaintance of many interesting and uncommon herbaceous plants. Besides the splendid collection of Henry A. Dreer, many of which are now flowering, Mr. Ulrich has planted on the island and on the borders of the shrubbery, many thousands which embrace a great assortment. Whoever sees the Rose Garden next week will see a bed of Crimson Rambler roses about 1,500 square feet that will be a bright spot indeed. It is one of the many exhibits of Frank R. Pierson. W.M. SCOTT.

BED OF CROTONS.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph taken last week of a bed in Lincoln Park, Chicago, in which crotons are a prominent feature. The bed is, of course, newly planted, and there has as yet been no opportunity for growth.

Another novelty introduced this year by Head Gardener Stromhaek is a bed of acalyphas. It is a circular bed with a palm in the center and the rest of the bed planted solidly with Acalypha Macaefana. Assistant Gardener Smith says, however, that it is slow work getting up a stock of this acalypha, and that any one who imagines they can be propagated nearly as readily as coleus will find he is mistaken.

WELL PLEASED.

I was well pleased with the returns from the classified ads., and enclose another.—E. I. BRADLEY, Murphysboro, Ill.

ST. LOUIS.

Club Meeting.

The St. Louis Florists' Club held a most enjoyable meeting last Thursday afternoon in the Commercial Club rooms at Belleville, Ill. The rooms were nicely decorated with roses and sweet peas for the occasion. It was by far the largest attendance the club has had this year. Edwardsville was represented by Fred Ammann and Henry Blixen, with them came Fred Rohrkaste and "Brother" Schmidt; Webster Grove, Mo., by Chas. Cannon, Sr.; Central, Mo., by John Steidle; Kirkwood, Mo., by "Billy" Winter and H. G. Ude; Detroit, Mich.; by Harry Balsley. Those from St. Louis were C. C. Sanders, representing the Florists' Exchange; R. J. Mohr, The American Florist; J. J. Beneke, The Florists' Review; Theo. Miller, Frank Fillmore, Carl Beyer, Emil Schray, Fred Meinhardt, F. J. Windt, C. A. Kueln and Chas. Juengel. Belleville was represented by E. W. Guy, Dr. A. S. Halstedt, Adolph Fehr, Gus Grossart and Henry Emundt.

The meeting opened promptly at 3 o'clock. The exhibition committee reported that the $500 Shaw prizes had been secured from the directors of the Missouri Botanical Garden and that $1,000 more would come from the flower-loving public. The prize list will be out in a week or ten days.

The transportation committee reported that the rate to Buffalo at present is $19.25 for the round trip, but that it would be cheaper by this time next month. Those who are going to the convention are requested to send their names at once to J. J. Beneke. All names must be in by the next meeting of the club in July.

The picnic committee reported that the annual outing of the club will take place at Preister's Park on Thursday, July 18. Further particulars may be had from the trustees of the club, who have the matter in charge.

Harry Balsley, of Detroit, was called upon for a few remarks on flower shows and Buffalo. Harry stated that all florists should attend the convention, as they would see something they never saw before and that it was a grand sight. On flower shows he told us how the Detroit and Indianapolis boys run their shows, which was very interesting to all the members. A vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Balsley for his remarks.

President Guy stated that the next meeting of the club will be a very important one. There will be the nomination of officers; convention matters and the annual outing will be discussed and he expects all the members to be present. The meeting will be held in the Odd Fellows' building at 3 p. m. The meeting then adjourned.

Those who went home early missed a good time. We had lots of fun at the bowling alleys and the good things to eat and drink and smoke were as plentiful as flowers at the wholesale houses. All visiting florists wish to extend their thanks through the REVIEW to the Belleville brothers for the pleasant time they had.

The Market.

The past week was quite a busy one for the florists, caused by quite a large number of June weddings and the closing of the schools. The West End florists had most of the wedding orders and the downtown stores had most of the school work. It was a very good thing for us that there were plenty of flowers in the market to supply all demands. This about winds up the school commencements and weddings and while there are to be a few more of the latter before the 1st of July the demand for flowers from this source may be considered over for this season.

The great supply of carnations and sweet peas still keeps up and so many come in that the wholesalers find it impossible to sell them all even at any old price. The supply of roses here also been good and the demand better. Candidum lilies have made their appearance and are in good demand.

All outdoor stuff is selling slowly and much of it goes to waste for want of demand. So long as roses, carnations and sweet peas glut the market these conditions will remain. The price of stock advanced a point the past week owing to the extra demand.

Carnations sold from $1 to $1.50 per 100; in 1,000 lots about 75 cents. Roses of the best quality being $3 to $5 and the seconds from $1 to $2 per 100. Beauties are scarce and the best quality are quoted at $2.50 per dozen and from that price down to 30 cents per dozen.

Candidum lilies are selling from 10 to 12 1/2 cents per stalk and are of good quality. Sweet peas, almost any price will buy them and they can hardly be quoted; 50 cents to $1 per 1,000 is about the price at this writing. New fancy ferns are now coming in and are quickly bought up as they are much better to work than the common dagger ferns. Smilax has had a good call all of the past week at $12.50 per 100 strings.

Notes.

Herbert Heller, of the South Park Floral Co., New Castle, Ind., was in town the past week attending the wedding of one of his friends. Herbert looks well and his many friends in the trade here claim that he will soon return as the attraction in the West End is hard to resist.

Harry Balsley, the red 'pot man from Detroit, was also a visitor. Harry looks the same as ever. This is his first visit to St. Louis since the convention in 1893.

Will Adels is now a benedict. He was married last Wednesday to Miss Emma Gusoskey. Quite a number of presents were sent by his many friends among the craft and the bowling club of which he is a member. They will be at home to their friends at 1422 Newhouse avenue, after this week.

Miss Theresa Badaracco will leave this Wednesday for West Baden Springs for her health. Miss Theresa expects to be gone a month or more. In her absence young Emil Arado will attend to the wants of the trade.

Wm Bouche the past week planted some 50 mulberry trees for the Corticelli Silk Co., to be used during the World's Fair as feed for silkworms for their exhibit. This is the start of the exhibitions for the World's Fair of 1903.

Bowling.

Eight members of the bowling club were at the alleys Monday night and rolled four games. Some good rolling was done by Ellison, Kuehn and Kunz, they being now in championship form. The others will have to show improvement to roll at the convention. The scores were as follows:

DIXON, ILL.—O. L. Baird, the florist, was married June 19, the bride being Miss Margaret Thompson, formerly of Morrison, Ill., but who has for the past eight years held a position in the high school here. The wedding trip will be to Buffalo in August at the time of the S. A. F. convention.

BOSTON.

Trade Conditions.

There is nothing of a particularly encouraging nature to report. There is such an enormous lot of material coming in that it taxes all efforts to keep the surplus down to reasonable proportions and the assistance of the street vender is invoked to carry at least one-half the product. There is probably as much store trade going on as can be expected but it hardly seems so because of the plenty of material left.

I was mildly criticised a few days ago because I do not say more about prices in my weekly (or shall I say "weekly?") effusions. But I fail to see any value connected with quotations of prices at which goods have been selling, and no one can tell what prices are going to be in the future. One day even sometimes makes quite a difference in some lines, due largely to Old Sol's influence. And there are so many qualities of the same kind of goods and so many prices by different men upon the same quality and so many prices by the same man to different customers that the subject is a hard one to keep up with. If a man is a regular visitor to any wholesale establishment of the city he knows figures as well as any one can tell him and if not a regular visitor prices will change before he gets there, so there you are again!

This is a particularly hard time to locate prices, too, but low figures have the call on everything. Beauties sell all the way from 25 cents to 83 per dozen, and Liberties scale exactly with them as the Wood Co. have some of the best ever grown at the latter figure. Meteors are selling at from $1 to $8 per 100, there being no very heavy ones just now. Maidens, Brides and Kaisers are going at from 50 cents to 88 per 100 and Perles are very scarce at about the same price. Pinks sell at from 25 cents to $1.50 per 100; both pinks and roses being represented heavily on the street. Lilies are plentiful at 4 to 6 cents and there is an irregular display of both outdoor and indoor goods all for small money.

Various Notes.

It seems Mr. Walsh has been running a matrimonial bureau at the Park street gardens in connection with his manifold duties. Successfully, too!

"Mike" Shea, F. C. Becker's foreman, is also foreman in the wedding march, being married a few evenings since. Next comes John Clark, foreman for Charles Evans; Hermann Bartsch, foreman for Wm. Edgar; Dell Cartwright, on the selling force of the E. M. Wood Co.; and Carl J. Dane. Rumor also points at W. H. Knapp, Arthur Kidder and J. J. Johnson's man Charnock as being about to accept degrees at Mr. Walsh's college. J. S. MANTER.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The market is glutted with flowers of all kinds. One dealer says that never before in his business experience has he seen so many flowers in the market in June. And in carnations there are many of good quality, but in roses the grade averages very low. Prices on the average run of stock are practically unquotable. At the same time prices on shipping grade are up to those of last week and a lot of the great mass coming in the dealer often has great difficulty in picking out enough of shipping grade to fill what few orders he gets.

Lilly the market is practically in the hands of the fakirs and they are in clover. State street is lined with them and they are selling enormous quantities. But it makes one feel for the growers to see clean up sales of carnations, often including very good flowers, made at as low as five cents a bunch of 25 flowers. The fakirs retail these on the streets at 10 cents a bunch and it is astonishing the number they dispose of. One fakir alone bought 649 bunches of carnations from one house last Tuesday.

It is not a pleasant picture to contemplate and it sets one to wondering what the final result will be.

One fakir who has two stands sold last Saturday 700 bunches of carnations, 3,000 tea roses, 400 dozen peonies and 1,750 cape jasmines. As a sample of his profits he bought the peonies at 10 cents a dozen and retailed them at 25 cents. The expense of running his stands was about $7.00 a day each and while he wouldn't say just what he made Saturday he admitted that during Friday and Saturday he cleaned up about $100 net.

Another one who has two stands sold last Saturday 200 bunches of peonies, 3,000 Beauties and 250 bunches of carnations, and his profit on the two stands was over $60. But of course it is comparatively rare that conditions are so strongly in their favor and they are making hay while the sun shines.

To one of these Greek capitalists we humorously put the stereotyped query: "How do you like America?" His response was: "America is all right." We should think it was, when the Greeks come here without a dollar and soon have thousand dollar wads to play ball, the races, or back theatrical ventures with.

Various Items.

A meeting of the Florists' Club will be held tomorrow (Friday) evening at the usual place.

Kennett Bros. Co. are receiving some remarkably fine white peonies. Their receipts of carnations last Tuesday mounted up to 35,000.

Mr. A. L. Vanghan, who has for the last few years acted as western representative for the New York firm of Hageman & Meyer, has associated himself with the firm of E. H. Hunt and will devote his energies to their bulb and supply departments. He has many friends in the trade who will be pleased to again meet him as a representative of "The old reliable."

Walter Kreiting & Co. did a very pretty decoration at the Washington Park Club last Saturday and last Monday arranged another handsome decoration at the Chicago Club. Peonies were a prominent feature at the latter.

The front of the fine double store at 181 and 183 State street, under the Palmer House, is completely covered by a huge sign announcing that Jos. Fleischman, the New York florist, will on Sept. 14 open there one of the finest floral stores in the world.

Wm. Blackman, Evansville, Ind., and

J. A. Evans, Richmond, Ind., were recent visitors.

The Marquise Litta rose is certainly a good keeper. A dozen blooms given us by Mr. Washburn, of Bassett & Washburn, last Tuesday were still in fair condition on Saturday though merely in a vase on a table in a dwelling and no ice at any time.

Greek met Greek on Randolph street last Tuesday. During the meeting one put his foot through the side of the other's glass case and in return got a flower jar broken over his head. The melee drew a large crowd which looked sympathetically at the broken case and proceeded to buy out the stock of flowers, probably under the impression that the youthful Greek was the sole support of a large family of widows and orphans, etc., whereas his "roll" was probably bigger than that of the whole crowd combined.

The parents of E. F. Winterson left for the Pacific coast last week and were due to arrive last Tuesday. They go to the bedside of his unfortunate brother John, who was so seriously injured as reported last week.

Bowling.

In the seventh series of league games, played last Tuesday evening, the Growers gave short count to the Retailers in two games, while the Retailers got a job lot in one game. The Wholesale pushed the Seedmen three games deeper and the latter's chance of terminating very small. J. S. Wilson pocketed one of those dollar prizes with a score of 204. The scores follow:

At a meeting after the games it was decided that the John A. Evans prize, a fine bowling ball, should go to the player making the highest average in the games, and he must have played not less than 24 games of the 36.

The five shirts offered by E. F. Winterson are to go to the five highest men in the final roll-off by the twelve highest in the present league series.

The winning team in the present series is to receive $7.00 and the next highest $5.00 in cash from the club.

George Asmus offers a box of good cigars to the man making the largest percentage of spares in not less than ten games during the series.

Of the prizes offered by G. L. Grant, a dollar for each score of 200 or more, six have been won and paid, and the offer stands good for the remainder of the present series.

NEW YORK.

Business.

Nothing of great importance to place on record from this city this week. The season continues to be very backward and the general impression is that we will have an unusually cold summer. Such may be most welcome to those condemned to stay in the city, but the summer resorts will suffer from much inactivity. There is the usual exodus to Europe, every steamer leaving New York is packed with humanity among which is a fair sprinkling of florists, but an early return is anticipated in order to attend the Buffalo Exposition.

The most prominent of the June weddings, that is those at which any considerable quantity of flowers were required, seem to be about over and in consequence the cut flower business is extremely dull. It is true there are not a great quantity of greenhouse grown roses coming in, but there are immense quantities of outdoor stock; you can buy roses all the way from $5 per 1,000 up, and as for carnations there is a wave of them coming in; they can be bought at from $2.50 to $5 per 1,000. Paeonies, that is the common sorts, could be had for $1 per 100. A correspondingly low price for all outdoor stock, and the greater part of present day work is made from material grown outdoors. Sweet peas have not been overplentiful and valley keeps up fairly well; it is selling at $3. There are some very nice Victorias, La France, Carnots and Meteors coming in, especially to Thomas Young, Jr. They will be well worth having later on when all is burnt up outside.

Various Items.

We do not hear of any very material changes in the stock to be grown for next season. From all accounts the same few sorts of roses will at least constitute the great glut. The wise and wealthy, however, are preparing to grow more American Beauties. It seems that after all that is the best paying and most popular rose on the market in this section. New houses are being put up for them and the prospects are there will be a much larger increase next year. Oh, if gluchs were only cheaper some parts of the country would be faking with it and then wouldn't the fakirs have a bully time.

The long expected affair between Paddy Smith, of John Raynors, and one of the O'Donnollans, of Connaught, has come to a climax and may it always be serene. Marriage seems to be more or less epidemic among the wholesalers of late, at least four of the boys went off in one street quite recently; that is one indication that business must be good. There's no telling what will occur after the club's summer outing, which event is about the most important in the near future. It comes at a time, too, when almost all can get away and employers will never have a better chance to trim their cup-plates.

There are but few changes in the retail section. The new center of high class florist trade is from Forty-first to Fifty-eighth street on Fifth avenue. There promises to be some great work in that locality next winter. There are seven large stores there and all are swell.

Jimmy Carroll, Fleischmann's manager, has gone to Atlantic Highlands, N. J., for the summer; he has designs against the fish in the Shrewsbury river and intends going in for the golf championship.

Ed Jensen has returned from his trip to Europe and has brought with him whatever basket novelties were worth considering.

Sam Butterfield has gone to size up the Pan-American show, and possibly will make a trip to his former home in Jamestown.

Bowling.

Bowling is on the quietus in New York, but there will be a good team at Buffalo, a team it will be hard to beat. Out at Flatbush on Tuesday night there was lots of fun and quite a crowd. The alleys there are very poor. The team wishes it understood that there will be a change on Brother Scott's alleys. The series rolled over:

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower market has now advanced into the summer condition. Festivities are nearly over for the season and stock generally is of rather poor quality. There is still some demand for first-class flowers, which will probably keep up throughout the summer, but this demand is light and uncertain and prices rule low. Many of the growers are emptying and cleaning their houses so that there is not any quantity of choice roses.

The best Beauties and Liberties bring from $1.50 to $2 a dozen; Kaisers, $6 for 100; good Carnots, Maids and La France, $3 to $5 per 100, with very few selling at the higher figure. Carnations are tremendously overdone, prices range from 40 cents to $1.50 per 100; $1 buying very fine flowers. Sweet peas are also in over-supply. It is probable by a time these notes appear that they will be as hard to sell as carnations, 35 cents to 50 cents per 100 are the prevailing figures. Peonies will be over this week. The growers say they have been poor stock this season.

Coreopsis has made its appearance, and is in light demand. It will soon be followed by the rest of the summer contingent. D. B. M. Felton, of Sixty-ninth and Haverford streets, grows this class of stock. His list includes Phlox Drummondii, larkspur, sweet williams, pyrethrum, marguerites, asters, hardy phlox, etc.

Plants.

The season for planting out of beds is practically over and the growers of this class of stock are now getting their stock plants out and cleaning up their houses. The season has been an exceptionally good one.

David Cliff, Main and Johnson streets, sold off cleaner than ever before. He notices a good demand for cannas Austria and Italia, and for scarlet sage, Bontire (or Clara Bedman).

Various Items.

Fred Ehret has been receiving very fine roses from J. Andre, of Doylestown, Pa. The returns have evidently been satisfactory, for this grower is now building a new house.

The demand for cut flowers at the commencements has fallen off this season. There have been other unsatisfactory features in connection therewith. Several bouquets ordered for the University of Pennsylvania class day were not admitted to the Academy of Music and although then sent to the students' boarding houses were never received. One order eventually found its way to the university hospital and the florist received a note of thanks for his donation!

Charles B. Stahl had his horses stolen on the evening of the 12th inst. The horses were found downtown next day minus the harness, which has not been recovered.

Mr. Rice, of M. Rice & Co., is returning from Europe with a quantity of novelties in florists' supplies.

Charles Fox, Broad and Thompson streets, had a large wedding decoration on Wednesday of this week; one of the kind of orders that enables Mr. Fox to show what he really can do.

The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society held its June meeting on Tuesday. There were fine exhibits of hardy roses and sweet peas brought out by a great variety of prizes. The exhibition remained open on Wednesday for the benefit of the general public and it was well worth seeing.

PHIL.

NURSERYMEN'S CONVENTION.

The twenty-sixth annual convention of the American Association of Nurserymen was held at Niagara Falls last week with over 200 members present. President Theo. J. Smith in the chair. Wm. C. Barry, of Ellwanger & Barry, extended a welcome to the visiting members, to which A. L. Brooke, of Kansas, responded. President Smith read his annual address and referred mainly to the future conduct of the business of the association. The treasurer's report showed a balance on hand of $2,232.13.

Professor L. H. Bailey, Ithaca, N. Y., gave a talk on "What Becomes of the Nursery Trees?"

The transportation committee reported having obtained a reduction in the southern freight rates of from 25 to 100 per cent. Irving Rouse reported on behalf of tariff committee that special efforts should be made to secure fair appraisements at ports of entry. C. L. Watrous, chairman of the legislative committee, gave details of efforts of that committee to ward off initial legislation.

Officers were elected as follows: President, Robert C. Berkman, Augusta, Ga.; vice president, R. J. Coe, Fort Atkinson, Wis.; secretary, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; treasurer, Charles L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y.; executive committee, Peter Youngers, Nebraska; M. W. Hale, Knoxville, Tenn.; William Pitkins, Rochester, N. Y. Next place of meeting Milwaukee.

Resolutions were passed condemning proposed free distribution of nursery stock by the federal government and asking legislative committee to use its influence to combat the proposed action. A resolution was also adopted regretting the absence of Hon. N. H. Albaugh on account of illness in his family.

SEED TRADE CONVENTION.

The annual convention of the American Seed Trade Association was held in Rochester, N. Y., last week, and it was a notable gathering.

Among those present were the following:

Frank H. Battles, Rochester, N. Y.; Roland Belgian, Washington, D. C.; Alfred J. Brown, Grand Rapids, Mich.; L. J. Correll, Ottawa, Canada; Lewis Childs, Floral Park, N. Y.; E. F. Crossland, of Robert Evans Seed Co., Hamilton; Everett B. Clark, Milford, Conn.; C. Clifford, Clifford E. Clark, Milford, Conn.; G. N. Davis, of Albert Dickinson Co., Chicago; O. H. Dickinson, of B. Shear, of Isebell & Co., Jackson, N. Y.; W. W. Templin, Calla, Ohio; W. W. Temple, Calla, Ohio; George W. Tilton, Cleveland, Ohio; Charles H. Vick, Rochester, N. Y.; S. F. Steele, Toronto, Can.; E. F. Crossland, Toronto, Ont.; W. C. Lambirdge, of Jerome E. Rice & Co., Cambridge, N. Y.

The early sessions were held in the Powers Hotel, but later ones were in invitation, held in the Chamber of Commerce. President Albert McCullough in his address reviewed the correspondence had during the year with the department at Washington regarding the free seed distribution evil and later further action was taken looking to its abatement.

The following new members were elected: August Roelker & Sons, of New York city; Joseph Kelling, Jr., Elyria, O.; A. Tilton & Son, Cleveland, O.; The Page Seed Co., Greene, N. Y.; The Briggs Bros. Co., Rochester, N. Y.

The delegates were welcomed to the city by the mayor and his address was responded to by Mr. C. L. Allen. The report of Treasurer Willard showed a balance on the right side. The report of the nomenclature committee was read and the suggestions made were adopted. The report of the committee on postal laws, postage on seed catalogues, etc., presented some valuable suggestions regarding proposed modifications in present laws governing postage on seed catalogues.

J. E. Northrup, of Minneapolis, read a paper on "Inconsistencies," reviewing some abuses which have crept into the trade. Alfred J. Brown's paper on "Contracts" went quite thoroughly into the subject, and provoked an interesting and spirited discussion, participated in by Messrs. Grenell, Robinson, Allen, Coryell, Wood, Northrup, Clark, Mandeville, May and Dibble; and flowing out of the discussion on motion of Mr. Wood a joint committee of six, to be selected half from the growers and half from the dealers, was constituted to confer and report not later than October next to the executive committee, which shall at their meeting next January promulgate the conclusions if it approves.

Secretary Willard read a paper by A. J. Pieters, of the division of botany, department of agriculture, Washington, D. C., which provoked considerable friendly discussion, and a vote of thanks was returned the writer. In connection with this paper attention was called by one of the members to the display at the Buffalo Pan-American made by the agricultural bureau. The title of Mr. Pieters' paper was "A Plea for a Standard Grade of Guaranteed Seeds." F. H. Eberling made a statement of certain abuses in the matter of high duties and irregular valuations in the matter of customs on imported seeds, bulbs, etc., and Mr. Leonard reported that there was promise that a remedy would be soon found and applied so as to place fewer technical restrictions on the entry of seeds from abroad.

Other papers were: "Factors Pertaining to Plant Life," by C. L. Allen, Floral Park, N. Y.; "Celery; Varieties and Sparging Habits," S. F. Willard, of Wethersfield, Conn.; "A Little Space from Massachusetts," O. H. Dickinson, Springfield, Mass.; "Kafir Corn," A. G. Trumbull, Kansas City.

On Wednesday afternoon the visitors were given a trolley ride about the city and in the evening there was a theater party for those who desired and a smoker for the others at the Rochester Club.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

President, Jesse E. Northrup, Minneapolis; first vice-president, S. F. Leonard, Chicago; second vice-president, F. H. Eberling, Syracuse; secretary-treasurer, S. F. Willard, Wethersfield, Conn.; assistant secretary, A. M. Clark, Milford, Conn.; executive committee, Albert McCullough, W. S. Gilbraith, H. W. Johnson, M. S. Griffith, Mel Webster; membership committee, H. W. Wood, H. M. Schisler, G. B. Clark.

JOLIET, ILL.

Mr. I. M. Phillips, superintendent of the factory of the Finley Lawn Rake Co., died June 18 of Bright's disease after an illness of about four weeks. He was in the prime of life and was a man of wide experience and native ability. He was the mechanical head of the concern and unquestionably ranked as high as any other man in this community of machine shops and institutions. Mr. Finley feels the loss very keenly, as he has lost a friend as well as a valued business associate.

BALTIMORE.

For the week ending today (June 17) trade has been extremely dull. There has been a great glut of out-of-door flowers, and June weddings and commencing events being about over, the demand even for good material has been light. From now on for whatever occasion flowers may be needed there will probably be a stiffer market, as the hardy stuff is nearly exhausted and many greenhouses, both of carnations and roses, have been pulled out. Sweet peas are over abundant. Paeonies were about two weeks later than usual, missing Decoration Day, when they are in most request, very generally. Cochet roses of fine quality are in evidence.

Here is a report from one of our daily papers of the work done by Charles L. Seybold, superintendent of Patterson Park, and who has the supervision besides of the Broadway Square, Eastern City Spring, Madison and Jackson Squares. In these he has planted 326 beds, using 226,000 plants.

This is a detailed statement of the work done in Patterson Park, which may have some interest to those who have to do with this kind of work. One Maryland State coat-of-arms, with two United States flags and shield of black and orange (medallion design), containing 7,400 plants.

One plastic bed representing an Indian wigwag, with slings, shield, feathers and spears, made of dwarf plants; 2,300 plants.

One cactus bed, with 75 varieties of plants, containing 2,275 plants.

Two three-tier rock tower beds; 6,500 plants.

Two butterfly beds, eight varieties of dwarf plants; 1,200 plants each.

Two floral mountain beds; 2,300 plants.

Two mosaic Parterre designs; 1,600 plants each.

Two beds 50 feet in diameter, containing rare shrubs, perennial plants and evergreen trees.

Six beds of European laurels, hydrangeas, azaleas and rhododendrons.

One bed of rare Japanese maples.

Thirty-seven shrubby beds, containing flowering shrubs and perennial plants of many varieties.

Two groups of hardy magnolias.

Two beds of nursery, containing 2,000 hardy rose bushes.

Two beds of rare dahlias—several hundred plants, complete collection of 35 varieties.

Three croton beds, containing 225 specimens of croton plants.

Five thousand five hundred hardy English ivy and periwinkle plants have been planted in different parts of the park; several large sub-tropical beds have also been planted, together with numerous beds of flowering and foliage bedding plants.

GLAZING.

We would like to hear through the REVIEW what is considered best to use for lapped glass—putty or mastic? Or is there anything better than either of these?

[We shall be pleased to hear from any of our readers who have had experience with both of the articles mentioned.—Ed.]

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.—The Salt Lake Floral Co., which is backed by W. A. Clark, Jr., son of the Montana copper king, and under the management of J. H. Mitchell, formerly of Butte, Mont., is rapidly proceeding with the erection of the greenhouse plant. Six houses are now going up, each 20x160. The plant will be devoted to the production of cut flowers. The company intends to have a chrysanthemum show next November, at which $1,000 in premiums will be awarded.

JEFFERSONVILLE, IND.—Joseph Molek is building a new greenhouse 24x100 and a fine two-story residence. When completed he will take a trip to Buffalo.

HEATING.

I am contemplating putting in a heating apparatus. Will you kindly tell me through the Review how large a boiler I must have and what boiler you would advise me to take?

I have two houses. One is 15x50, long span to the south, which is 10 feet; side walls 4 feet, center 8 high. The second house is even span, 46 feet long by 10 wide and 4 feet wall, which I have been heating with 1-inch pipes with a coil in stove with good satisfaction. I think I would prefer 2-inch pipes for the one house, and how many feet of pipes would I need?

I intend to make this house an even span some day, so I want the boiler large enough to heat both houses.

How much would it cost to put in such an apparatus? _____ C. J. L.

In reply to the inquiry of C. J. L. I would suggest for the heating of the house 15x50 feet with long span to the south, assuming glass on the roof only, 10 lines of 2-inch wrought iron pipes, and for the house 46 feet by 10 feet, with glass on the roof only, 6 lines of 2-inch pipes. It would be impossible to advise you as to the arrangement of piping in detail without having plans of the building as a guide for the complete layout of the piping, and it would not be possible to state the cost of such apparatus without making a full diagram of the piping and fittings which would be necessary.

In the matter of boilers, we would advise a hot water boiler having a manufacturer's rating of capacity of at least 600 feet. The boiler should have ample fire and combustion space and be free from all contracted flues, having flues of long travel and liberal area. The grate surface of such a boiler would be about 518 inches. _____ H. W. GIBBONS.

New York.

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO.

This city promises to be well represented at the Buffalo convention, and also at the meeting of the National League of Improvement Associations which immediately follows the S. A. F. gathering.

A committee representing the league visited Buffalo and completed a number of convention arrangements. Mr. W. A. Adams very kindly agreed to handle the hotel reservation business for the leagues. Florists may direct all improvement convention inquiries to Mr. Adams. The banquet hall had already been reserved for the three days of business and pleasure planned for the league delegates and others interested.

Platform addresses, with magnificent stereoscopic illustrations, will make the Monday and Tuesday evening meetings of rare interest. The day programs will include business sessions, the school of methods and visits to Buffalo parks and exposition grounds. These visits will be prefaced in the convention by statements of the technical points to be observed.

Specific announcement of topics and speakers will be made shortly. The management proposes to extend a formal invitation to S. A. F. members who may remain over for the league meeting. The trade will doubtless receive good returns from the acceptance of this invitation. Certainly a first hand knowledge is desirable for dealers who wish to use the improvement interest in furthering their own business.

S. A. F. members desirous of visiting Chautauqua in connection with the Buffalo trip will find added interest in remaining for the league convention and then running down to Chautauqua with those who speak and listen during "Improvement Day," Thursday, August 15th, at the pioneer assembly. Prof. Zenblin, of Chicago University, and Mr. E. L. Slmey, of Dayton, will be the chief attractions.

By the way, it may interest many readers to learn that improvement days and lectures are being placed on a number of the summer Chautauqua programs. Mount Eagle and other assemblies propose organizing assembly improvement associations, and Devil's Lake, S. D., plans a careful though not expensive landscape gardening scheme for the assembly grounds. These points may offer some business for several enterprising floral merchants.

The league is sending out to editors, real estate and paint men, agricultural fair boards, architects and others, 3,000 copies of a notice reading as follows:

"The following reproduction of a hand bill circulated by the Springfield (Ohio) Improvement League may be suggestive of a plan feasible in any community. In some cases a well-known citizen, such as Andrew Carnegie or John H. Patterson, offers the prizes; in others an interested business firm provides the awards for the sake of its employees and neighbors, as has been done by the Cleveland Cliff Iron Company and the Westinghouse Air Brake Company, Goodrich House Settlement, Cleveland, and First Presbyterian Mission, Dayton, have made the prize plan a part of their neighborhood work. Improvement associations in many cases, newspapers, school principals and others, are in vogue in obtaining the necessary backing. Florists, real estate men, architects and paint dealers in particular together with publishers, county fair boards and business men in general, may find this a popular promotive scheme.

"Then follows a list of awards, including offers to the janitors of school and other public buildings; lawns where property is owned or rented, with separate classes for occupants receiving salaries more or less than two hundred a year, and extra prizes to the boys and girls having the most attractive flower beds."

Since the above was first printed I understand that both the Chicago Tribune and the Cleveland Leader have joined the ranks of prize givers. If florists will mail or hand copies of this circular to local business men or publishers, they may get the prize idea started without expense to themselves. The Improvement League will send you the copies needed without charge.

BUFFALO HOTELS.

The Buffalo Florists' Club have undertaken to arrange for the accommodation of all visitors who are expected to attend the convention of the S. A. F. in Buffalo.

While it is true that hotel rates will be higher than usual, there are a number of apartment houses that have been fitted out for the accommodation of Pan-American visitors; also private homes in the suburbs of the city, where rooms can be had for $1 and up for each person, and in many breakfast will be served. In other places will be given all meals, the latter not so plentiful.

The hotel committee have a list of houses and hotels with the rates, and any person or persons wishing to engage rooms can have same given in advance by addressing the chairman of the committee, W. A. Adams, 473 Main street, Buffalo, N. Y., stating whether they want accommodations at hotel, apartment or private house, with or without breakfast, and the number of persons desiring accommodations; together. It will be necessary to inform the committee early, as they have the refusal of several apartments for the week, where from one hundred to one hundred and fifty can be accommodated in one place.

It will be unnecessary to communicate with W. J. Stewart, secretary of the S. A. F., as the executive committee have authorized the Club to accommodate the visitors, which the hotel committee are willing to do, providing they are notified in time.

Street car facilities are excellent, the restaurants plentiful and rates reasonable. No one need be concerned in the matter, and with the above desirable apartments and private houses every one will be taken care of if they notify the committee in time.

THE COMMITTEE.

CHICAGO TO BUFFALO.

The Chicago Florists' Club has instructed the committee appointed to arrange for transportation to the convention of the Society of American Florists at Buffalo next August, to issue an announcement to the members and the trade in general that it hopes to secure especially advantageous terms and accommodations this year and that the larger the party the better the chances of securing the greatest consideration from the transportation lines.

The annual convention of the S. A. F. and the Pan-American Exposition combined will no doubt be a grand affair, and the card and attendance will unquestionably be large.

If it could be known definitely in advance just how many florists will be coming to Buffalo, Chicago, so the committee could name an approximate number with some degree of certainty, it would merit serious attention in their efforts to secure the largest possible concessions.

Will you therefore notify the committee—

First—Whether you are reasonably certain of attending the convention and intend traveling with the club's special party?

Second—Whether you hope to join the party but are uncertain of being able to do so?

Third—Whether you have made up your mind that you cannot attend this year?

Please address reply to any one of the committee as below.

CINCINNATI

The Market.

The less said of business the past week the better. The worst glut of the season was on and it was utterly impossible to move the enormous supply of stock at anything like paying figures. Also, the fact that a good proportion of the stock was anything but first-class, did not tend to help matters.

Owing to the late summer carnations have been holding out in first-class style. E. G. Gillett has been receiving some extra good fancy ones from Mrs. E. T. Grave, of Richmond, Ind. Genevieve Lord is especially good, with America right alongside.

Ethel Crocker is proving itself to be a warm weather carnation. With some of the growers in this vicinity it has done no good till the present time; now it is in fine form, proving that warm weather has no terrors for this variety. Wm. Murphy says that he believes this variety needs a high temperature during the winter, and he intends to experiment along this line the coming season.

Various Items.

On Tuesday last a severe hail storm visited the country a few miles west of this city. It covered a territory about one-half mile wide, leaving ruin in its trail. Adam Frank was the only florist in this track. His loss is about $300 and he has no insurance. The Murphys, who have large ranges of glass in this district, escaped by a hair's breadth, as the eastern edge of the storm passed over their places, but there was no damage done. J. A. Peterson also had a close call. It was reported in the daily press that in some places hail had drifted to the depth of three feet.

Jake Meier and Miss Margaret Mueller were married last week. As also were Mr. Ed Lester and Miss Nellie Lindsay. Martin Reukauf, of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., was in the city. C. J. OHMER.

BOSTON.

The rose and strawberry show of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, scheduled for the 20th and 21st of this month, is on account of the lateness of the season necessarily postponed to Wednesday and Thursday, the 26th and 27th. The paeony show will be held at the same time.

DES MOINES, IA.—D. B. Patterson has succeeded to the business of the Livingston Seed Store. Josiah Livingston, the former owner, returns to Columbus, O., where he will go into business with his brothers. Mr. Patterson was associated in the business with Mr. Livingston here for several years.

DOVER, DEL.—The United States court has released J. W. C. and W. W. Pullen, who have been held on the charge of fraudulently using the mails. The charge was not sustained.

CARNATIONS

F. DORNER & SONS CO., LaFayette, Ind.

Mention THE REVIEW when you write.

DALLAS, TEXAS.

Trade still continues good in floral work and decorations. Commencement exercises create a good demand. Cut flowers are scarce, especially good buds and carnations are on the decline. In the house 105 degrees in the shade is not exactly the temperature to produce large flowers on plants that have been in constant bloom since September last. Mums look fine and we shall have a pretty good showing for fall. Two houses 250x20 are planted for single stem and one house 20x130 is in pots for store sale plants.

Field carnations are looking fine, having been pinched back for the third time. Outside roses are fine and we shall be cutting fine Beauties from outside in a few weeks. One block of young teas, 30,000, for fall sales, are the best we ever had. If we get a little rain off and on until fall the grounds of the Texas Seed & Floral Co. will be worth quite a trip to see.

We are building some houses 150x20 to be planted this fall to carnations and roses for next spring blooming. These houses are to be what we term sash houses and are built with open or movable sides and movable sash roof. In the winter we close up the sides and put on the sash roof removing same in spring and replacing the glass with a coarse lath shade. This protects the flowers from the hot sun rays and enables us to cut fine flowers for this season. We have one house of sweet peas that have been handled this way. We sow the peas in December and have a fine cut in for Easter.

We have several large lath shaded frames that we use for plunging plants under in summer but we find the cool houses a great convenience as we can remove the glass and have virtually a summer treatment with the advantage of the glass for early starting up. We made solid beds in all of these houses. The house we had to sweet peas was 200 feet long and contained eight rows of peas trained to wire fence and you never saw a finer show. Our northern brothers could not miss it to give this style of house a trial. We use no steam pipe in these houses. They are run cool and we keep sash open all the time possible through the winter months.

UTICA, N. Y.

At the last meeting of the Utica Florists' Club four candidates were admitted to membership and five applications for membership were received. The matter of the flower show to be held in the fall was informally discussed, but action concerning the arrangements was deferred until the next meeting, which will be held on July 11 instead of July 4, the regular date.

CLOSED OUT ALL STOCK.

A few words in regard to your classified advs. Last year, late in the season, we had a surplus stock of some considerable thousands of asters on hand, and had about concluded the season was over, but your classified advs. coming to our notice, although we are rather conservative in regard to new things, we concluded to try them, as the rates were so reasonable that there could not be but a small loss if we received no returns. The effect was that we closed out all the stock and returned some cash to customers whose orders we could not fill.—A. & G. ROSBACH, Pemberton, N. J., June 11, 1900.

THE FLORISTS' MANUAL.
 A Reference Book for Commercial Florists

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Palms.

Most florists have in their houses a few large palms which they use for decorating. It will do these plants a very great deal of good if they are stood out of doors during summer. It is a mistake to think that palms burn; they do, most of them, only if neglected for water. The exceptions are the arecas. Those I would not advise you to put out unless it is in an entirely shady place. Palms will also burn when grown in a dark shady house and suddenly removed to the full sunlight, but I am not supposing you have grown your kentias and latanias in a shady house and with much heat. Under ordinary treatment they can be moved to the brightest rays of the sun. By all means sink the plants in the sod or have some plunging material around them and keep them well supplied with water. It is when dry that they burn. We have for years been putting out latanias, kentias, phoenix and some of the larger pandanus and consider that they are much better and more serviceable plants in the fall than if coddled up under glass. This, of course, does not apply to small or moderate sized plants that you want to increase in size. In addition to plunging the plants, an inch or two on the surface of the soil of some good manure will help them a great deal.

Gloxinias.

I hope you have not in this busy time neglected your gloxinias. We find them a very salable plant during July and August, but they want a little more growing than most of our plants. They also want very careful potting or you will break their leaves in the operation. Soil I have never found of any great consequence. A good loam with a fourth of leaf mold or well rotted manure, or even of spent hops, suits them admirably. They do not like a dense shade and a close house or they will get rusty; neither will they stand the brightest sun. A slightly shaded house is best. I have never grown as good plants as when I stood each plant on an inverted 6-inch pot and gave plenty of room for daylight between them. Watering is also a great point with gloxinias. They do not want to be over watered and yet if allowed to flag they lose their flowers soon. Watch them and water when they want it with no unnecessary amount on the leaves.

Hydrangeas.

Don't forget to plunge, if you have not already done so, your hydrangeas out of doors in the broad sun, but see that they are well plunged and do not suffer for want of water. I once made a failure of these by standing them too close and they got very much crowded. As they grow give plenty of room so the light can get all around them.

Primroses.

Your young Chinese primroses will now be wanting a 2-inch pot. Some growers get these into a cold-frame during summer, with a shaded sash. That will do if you are sure not to neglect them. I have had the best results by keeping the young plants in a shaded house. While growing primroses don't forget obconica, and the "Baby" primrose, Forbesii. They are easily raised and are most useful for cut flowers during winter.

Soil.

Some florists may be better situated than others for the supply of soil or potting earth, or "dirt" as it is too often called by our customers. I have learned for a number of years that it is an excellent idea to buy it whenever it is offered. If you are situated in a growing city you will find every year there is more difficulty in obtaining this important article. As I have often remarked, a man will lay out a thousand dollars a year, or even five thousand, for coal, but will grudge one hundred for soil. It is true we must keep warm, but good soil is the foundation of our business, and even if you buy enough for two or three years ahead it is money well invested. Another thing, you should not put it off till October and then be busting around to see where you can buy fifty loads of soil. Get it done at once, while you have time to attend to it.

I think as good a plan as any for the florist who does a lot of potting is to lay the soil if possible in layers six inches deep. Put two or three inches of manure on the top of this, letting each layer have a good application of the hose until it is thoroughly wet through, then another layer of soil and follow on with the manure, and so on till the bed is about four feet high. At this time of the year if properly wet when being piled up the manure will quickly decompose and in two months you can chop it down, beginning at one end, and throw it over, and if possible before winter one more turning will be good, but if that is too much labor the turning over that it gets as you wheel it into your shed for winter use will be sufficient.

Benches.

You are sure to have a good many repairs to do. We always do every summer. There should be little delay about this, for it is much pleasanter to take a rest after your work is done than to have the work continually before you. In fact, those who plant chrysanthemums and roses must have their benches in order at once, and those who grow carnations have no time to spare because the first of August is pretty well agreed upon as late enough to plant this most important crop.

I have many times recommended using 2-inch plank instead of 1-inch boards, and if the right material is used I still think it is the cheapest in the end, but perhaps not where your benches were used for plants, as you are more often making changes in these houses than you are with the crops that grow in the solid benches. We use planks 6 inch by 2 inch of hemlock. I am aware this wood is not common everywhere, but it is the cheapest with us and is better than cheap white pine. Where you are fortunate enough to be so situated that you can get cypress, or, as the Canadians do, use tamarack, that lumber is much better than either pine or hemlock.

I have no reason to alter my opinion about the use of a good dressing of water lime, or, as it is properly known, hydraulic cement, although the greatest benefit from this is, of course, on new lumber, and it pays well for the time and expense of applying it, as it keeps the water out of the wood and adds two or three years to its durability. We put a 5-inch pot full of water lime in a mail and fill it up with water, keeping it well stirred or it will settle quickly, then apply with a whitewash brush. In fact, the mixture had better be about as thick as you can spread it on the boards.

Empty Pots.

A very simple thing that should hardly need writing about is the care of our empty flower pots. With people who do a retail and general plant business there is a very great accumulation of empty pots just now. I am sorry to say I found recently some young men who were inclined to argue with me that it was quickest and cheapest to throw the pots under the bench. This I entirely disagree with. The very worst place to keep flower pots is under the bench. You are sure to have some crop over them that will keep them continually moist, and if there is anything that will unfit a plant for healthy growth it is a water-logged, dirty pot. Never mind the few days' labor. You can move many thousand pots in a few days. Get them out somewhere in orderly and compact piles where the sun and rain can beat down on them. Even if it is only the fact of their having been once thoroughly dried out it will do them a great deal of good.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

TIMOTHY EATON.

To guide growers of "Timothy Eaton" chrysanthemum aright, and make it a success, we desire to say that the flower being naturally a large one, requires that the plant to produce perfect specimens should be grown only to single stems, giving liberal space. Ours last year (as seen by Mr. Scott, of Buffalo, and other prominent florists) were planted in 3-foot beds, five plants across, and nine inches between the rows. All were planted in like manner. This does not mean that for exhibition purposes or special market a wider space would not be advantageous, as it certainly would be.

The crown bud must not be taken before end of August or beginning of September and great care should be exercised in syringing that water does not lodge in it, as early buds are liable to come cup shaped and thus hold water and rot. Terminal buds have produced much larger and finer flowers than those exhibited by us last year at various places. The plant will stand liberal feeding.

We write these notes to aid purchasers of stock, as we are desirous they should make "Timothy Eaton" a success and surpass our efforts in growing it last year.

Bracondale, Ont.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

Plants.

Year after year we find a remarkable decrease in the value of the small plant trade in New York, particularly from a retail standpoint. The profits, if any at all, from that end of the business, have become so very small that the majority of store florists only buy to fill some order, or carry a small stock just for appearance sake. There are two great reasons for this, the auction room and the peddler's cart. We have a shed for a market where the growers assemble at dawn and clear away by 8 a. m. The place is a gigantic disgrace. We often go there to watch the evolution of the plant trade. A few years ago every florist with a store in and about the city could be met there at daybreak buying his wagonload of plants, but now it is all changed. The retail florists are scarcely seen there—one not but the peddler, the fishmonger, the butcher, or professional speculator. This means a very serious loss to the grower, prices have gone downward and instead of there being an increase in the number of plants grown it appears to us the reverse is the fact.

There is something very remarkable about all this. At the auction rooms last week coleus from 2½-inch pots brought an average price of 1½ cents each, and geraniums could be bought at from 1½ cents up to 5. On Saturday last the residential section of the city was kept interested by the peddlers, who offered fine geraniums in 3½-inch pots for 5 cents each. What must they have paid for them? And can they be grown at that with any profit? It is apparent to all at any rate that the retailer cannot compete with such a condition, and it would be wiser and better for the future of the plant trade were a suitable market provided where the public could go and purchase direct from the grower.

The day is fast going, if it has not already gone, when the average store man can afford to carry a respectable stock of bedding plants, for in the first place it must be always in bloom and in tip-top condition, and the expense of keeping it so far exceeds the recompense. 'Tis only where one has vase or box trade that any profit can be made, and they are foolish who make up such an order at the actual value of the plants, as we know many are guilty of doing without any reason.

We notice a great transformation in the material and make-up of summer vases. This year more palms and foliage plants are being used. They look richer and more substantial than where flowering plants only are in evidence.

Window Displays.

There has been nothing very remarkable seen in the New York florists' windows of late. When the weather gets any way warm windows become neglected and are often discreditably. One Broadway store has a bark-covered tank with fountain in center; several varieties of cut water lilies float; the water, and altogether the exhibit looks cool and otherwise attractive. That is Small's window. Thorley for the past three weeks has been displaying a vase of very fine white chrysanthemums; the blooms are about five inches in diameter, of the Queen type; they are the greatest curiosity on the market just now; of course the stock is exclusive, there is not much call for it, all the same they are very fine for bunch or vase work, and it goes to prove that there will soon be no season for any kind of flower, which is rather a detriment to the business.

Shakespeare gladiolus, Hydrangea Otaksa, centaureas and a general assortment of outdoor flowers constitute the majority of window stock. Summer windows are easily kept creditable by a sensible selection of material. The florist's store, particularly on hot days, is generally considered by the public to be refreshingly cool; the sight of a few green plants in your window alone is often capable of producing that effect. There is nothing that will stand better than a wealthiest summer resort in the world, something in the shape of a floral fete cannot be gotten up. We are under the impression that it would require very little exertion on the part of the local society to get up an annual floral affair that would do more good in one year than all the shows they have held for the past decade. American floriculture depends almost entirely on commercial values. The flower shows of the future must needs be associated with some festive occasion, where utility, in the shape of adornment, will bring pleasure and profit to all. Florists are on the wrong track when they stick a few flowers in bottles on a bench and get huffy and ugly because the American public don't rush in to fall in rapture before the queenly splendor of their pets. Times and peoples have changed; they look for entertainment and are willing to pay for high quality. If the same amount of money and energy were put into summer floral fetes as is put into winter shows results would be far more profitable. It is a question that deserves consideration.

The occasion of the convention at Buffalo in August should and could be made an eye-opener as a floral event at small cost. At least something should be done to have the retailers add whatever they can to the beauty and impressiveness of the floricultural display there, be it only in an inexpensive display of artistic ability.

Business is almost at a standstill in all the eastern cities. Flowers are cheap and abundant, the street stands are few good aspidistras, although almost anything green will do well if properly cared for. A mistake is made in having an empty window or filling it with baskets or paper boxes. There is nothing like letting people see you are alive and in business; there are always some good flowers to be got, and there is no telling who may come along.

The Summer Resorts.

There promises to be some good big floral decorations at the summer resorts this season, and we will deal with that subject next week. Pity it seems that in a place like Newport, which is the doing the most of the cut flower trade. Funeral work consists mainly of wreaths and loose bunches. At the high school and college graduating exercises so far large bunches of roses, carnations and sweet peas were the principal floral tokens sent; very few baskets. Many of the stores will no doubt be closed on the Fourth of July; all of them should be. Put the American flag in your window and let all enjoy the great day.

No. 2.—Outdoor use of Foliage Plants.

OUTDOOR USE OF FOLIAGE PLANTS.

The outdoor use of foliage plants is by no means a novelty to the gardener in this favoring climate, but is a method of beautifying the garden that is doubtless growing from year to year, and from the interesting and beautiful examples that are presented in the accompanying illustrations (reproduced from "Möller's Deutsche Gärtnerei Zeitung") we have evidence that our German brethren also practice and appreciate this branch of the art. Indeed, it is said that the first use of what are termed sub-tropical plants for outdoor planting was made in continental Europe, and in France and Germany in particular, after which we find that sub-tropical bedding became a notable feature in some of the parks of London, and in Battersea Park in particular fully thirty years ago, under the management of Mr. John Gibson, a gardener of the old school and one who was deservedly renowned.

In the early European practice of this kind of gardening it was thought necessary to build up the beds that were to be used for these tender foliage plants, using a considerable quantity of drainage material beneath them, and also raising the sides of the beds with brick or stone work. Such a course may have been well to follow in the less favorable climate of some of those countries, but here rather an opposite course is usually found to be desirable, from the fact that we are so bountifully endowed with bright sunshine that it would be almost an impossibility to keep the plants wet enough if the beds were raised above the surrounding ground.

Rich soil and an abundance of water are among the essential conditions for the welfare of these plants when placed in the outdoor garden, and time may be lost rather than gained by too early planting, June 1st being quite early enough as a rule, though an exceptionally warm season may permit of an earlier start than this.

Strong contrasts in form, color and foliage are quite permissible in this style of gardening, provided that a harmonious irregularity be produced, such as that shown in illustration No. 1, in which we find a large clump of Arundinaria japonica (Bambusa Mektake) as the most prominent feature of the background, that is, unless we consider the trees in the distance as being the background proper. In front of the arundinaria a fine mass of the Egyptian papyrus, Cyperus Papyrus, and a clump of tall growing cannas are seen, these in turn being more closely connected with the surrounding sod by a planting of smaller cyperus and assorted plants.

Toward the right side of the picture another strong contrast appears between the massive leaves of the Abyssinian banana, Musa ensete, and the foliage of some grass-like species, among which appear Arundo donax and Pennisetum (or Gymnothrix) latifolium, while the fine specimen of Fourcroya gigantea in the foreground forms another pleasing and distinctive feature in this arrangement.

Picture No. 2 is less distinct, but displays a pleasing arrangement of foliage among which finely cut forms predominate.

Picture No. 3 evidently shows the clever combination of permanent and transient plantings, the splendid bamboos at the back and also the large-leaved plant at the right of the picture (probably Gunnera scabra) being among the permanent occupants of the garden, while the musas, cyperus, dracaenas and various other plants in the foreground and also the fan palm in the extreme left of the picture are among the transient members of the combination, the completed effect being a very pleasing one.

A very striking effect is that secured in the large bed of foliage plants shown in picture No. 4, the musas and Caladium esculentum showing a noble growth, while the pennisetum also gives proof of having found congenial quarters. The smaller groups around the large bed seem to be of doubtful advantage in this case, and in the opinion of the writer the large bed would be even more effective without them, though it may be that they have been so placed to secure some particular color effect.

The musas shown in this picture have unusually good foliage, and it would seem that they must be protected to some extent from strong winds, the leaves of this musa being often much torn by the wind during our breezy summer weather, though the plants will continue to grow quite rapidly notwithstanding this disadvantage. Musa superba is possibly a little tougher in the foliage than M. ensete, but even this also gets torn quite badly at times.

But these pictures by no means exhaust the list of available subjects for sub-tropical bedding in our climate, and we may also include various ficus and aralias, Grevillea robusta, crotons and acalyphas, ricinus, abutilons and many others, without considering those deservedly popular plants, the improved cannas. W. H. TAPLIN.

THE PAST CENTURY.

We reprint below a very interesting and comprehensive review of the wonderful progress of floriculture during the nineteenth century, written by Mr. R. Dean and published last January in the Gardeners' Chronicle, of London, England. It will no doubt surprise many who have not stopped to give this matter thought to learn that practically all of the present favorites were introduced or developed during the past hundred years. And as only by the accomplishments of the past can we realize the possibilities of the future, we feel sure this record cannot fail to deeply interest every thoughtful member of the profession.

The first thirty years of the century which has just closed were passed in a time of great political excitement at home; the people were groaning under a heavy load of taxation; political liberty was restricted, and penal laws cruel in the extreme. During such a time horticulture was at a low ebb. It was scarcely a period to spend money on pleasures; there were dangers abroad, and unrest at home. In Lancashire, at Norwich, and elsewhere, where they formed little colonies, the Flemish weavers were tending their auriculas and tulips, which their forefathers had brought with them at the time of the immigration, as things too precious to leave behind them; and they, living somewhat apart from the peoples among whom they settled, kept alive their love for such subjects by carefully tending them.

THE GREENHOUSE.

Glass erections for the culture of plants, such few as existed, were heavy in design and uncouth in appearance; cumbersome woodwork and fanciful elevations operated to make such houses ill adapted for the successful cultivation of plants. Heating by means of hot-water apparatus was unknown until some years afterwards; the old brick or tile flue, and the Poimaise system, which was based upon the principle of drawing the cold air from the house or pit, and forming a chamber around the stove, were in operation. It is curious to note how steadily the introduction of heating by hot-water pipes was resisted in some quarters. John Abercrombie, in 1820, writes of the forcing-house, furnished with "internal flues, ranged along the front, or middle, for fire-heat, and sometimes, extending along the middle space within" as a perfect system of heating, and the opponents of the new system contended that brick-flues colored grapes far better than they would color under any other system of heating. Plant culture was imperfectly understood; the great bulk of the gardeners in those days confined the culture of their choice plants to small pots, as they appeared to have but little idea of forming specimens. They were grown on steep stages, rising by successive narrow shelves to near the roofs of the house, and I have heard the late Mr. John Lee declare that he had known cases of gardeners using the shears for the purpose of keeping the growing shoots within due bounds.

EARLY INTRODUCTIONS.

In the first twenty years of the century but very few of the leading subjects cultivated in our days had been introduced. A few were to be found in gardens, such as troedodipladenias, clerodendrons, ixoras, alamandras, bougainvillea, several erics, apacris, statice, stephanotis, etc., which remain to this day the leading exhibition subjects, with eucharis, anthurium, lapageria, etc. The camellia, once the most popular of greenhouse plants, has gone through a period of decline in the public estimation, probably on account of the severe symmetry of its blossoms which do not commend themselves to the present-day tastes. Still it is a conservatory plant almost without a rival. Its ample leafage is always handsome, and the habit of growth on the whole desirable. It is occasionally said there are signs of revival of the camellia in the estimation of the gardening public, which is a reasonable assumption.

THE AZALEA.

Azalea indica was introduced in 1806. A. amena and A. sinensis are later introductions. In 1823-1824 appeared A. variegata, A. ledifolia and others, also introductions from China; and by 1850, some twenty or so named varieties had been collected, the result of cross-breed-

Newington, was among the first to recommend taking the seed and raising seedlings—this he was doing nearly sixty years ago, and after him came a number of others, all of whom in some degree assisted the advance. Rich, deep colors have been imparted to the flower; a large flowered section has been obtained; and also what is known as the "Butterfly Section" with thin plumed and fringed petals; a singular and attractive break which is destined to add additional value to the cyclamen as a decorative agent.

THE CANNA.

In the early part of the century Canna indica and glauca were included among scitamineous hothouse plants. It was not until Mr. A. Roger, within the last forty years, used the few cannas then in cultivation in his illustrations of sub-tropical gardening in Battersea Park, that the plant became popular, and since then, by the aid of M. Crozy and others, improvements have gone on by leaps and bounds. In the greenhouse and conservatory, and also in the open ground in summer, the canna is an invaluable decorative subject, with handsome leafage and brilliant blossoms of larger size.

THE GARDENIA.

Several specimens of gardenia were in cultivation in the early part of the century; among them G. florida, introduced from China a half century previously, and G. radicans, which came from Japan in 1804. We have witnessed the gardenia ranking as the chief button-hole flower of the rich; and we have seen it hawked in the streets of London at one penny per bloom. Its almost overpowering fragrance has perhaps operated to bring about something in the way of neglect.

THE RHODODENDRON.

The introduction of Rhododendron javanicum in 1847 gave the introducers, Messrs. Veitch & Sons, an opportunity to employ it for the purposes of hybridization, and there has resulted a race of greenhouse rhododendrons, double and single-flowered, that bloom during the autumn and winter as well as in spring and summer, of brilliant and varied colors, producing large, bold trusses of bloom. They gleam forth amid the murky days of midwinter with a brilliance peculiarly their own.

THE CLIVIA.

Clivia miniata and the many fine varieties raised from it is a product of the latter half of the past century. But little variation has come in the way of color, as the varieties are restricted to yellow and orange shades; the plant has yet a great decorative value, its imposing trusses of bloom being very striking in appearance.

THE GLOXINIA.

Few plants have moved on with such enormous strides as the gloxinia. The last sixty years has seen the pendent, flat-mouthed corolla changed to one quite erect and perfectly circular in outline (regular peloria). The first erect form was obtained in 1884, and was named Fyiana, after the raiser, Mr. John Fyfe. The strains in the present day are so fine, and withal so perfect, that improvements appear to be almost at an end. Our cultural methods have advanced as Allamanda cathartica, Amaryllis reticulata (A. vittata is not mentioned, though it would appear Dean Herbert was at work with this quite by 1820), Ixoras alba and coccinea, Gloxinia maculata, Plumbago rosea, Vinca rosea and its white variety, and a few others.

In the forties and fifties the brothers May, Cole, Barnes, Green, Carson, Glendining, the brothers Fraser, and others, were exhibiting many hard-wooded plants, such as adenandra, aphelandra, chorizema, correa, crowea, cyrtocera, darwinia, draecophyllum, eristemom, francisea, gompholobium, justicia, kalosanthes, medinilla, metrosideros, Meyenia erecta, monochetum, pavetta, polygala, sollya, swainsonia, tecoma, tetratheca, thyrsacanthus, tremandra, etc., that are now very rarely seen at a first-class exhibition, and which there is reason to fear are in danger of being lost to cultivation. With the advent of Thomas Baines and his compeers, came almost a new group of specimen stove plants, for there had been meanwhile ining. Such names as Ivory, Knight, Kinghorn, Smith and Lee were among the earliest improvers of the azalea in this country, and it is not to be wondered that it became a very popular conservatory and exhibition subject. Of late years the greater part of the new varieties have come from abroad, including double forms of great beauty, and a few have originated by means of sports. Mr. W. Carmichael and others have obtained valuable hybrids by crossing A. amena with A. indica. The azalea bids fair to remain a popular plant for many years to come. There were double-flowered varieties as far back as 1850.

THE CYCLAMEN.

During the first quarter of the last century, no attempt appears to have been made to improve Cyclamen persicum (latifolium), introduced nearly a century before. It would be difficult to state who were among the first to lead the way in improving the type by means of seeding from it. Kendall, of Stokes also, and it is possible to have the plants in flower six months from the time of sowing the seeds. This is an achievement of which those who grew gloxinias forty years ago little dreamed.

THE BEGONIA.

One of the most notable products of the nineteenth century was the tuberous-rooted begonia. Of the five or so species of begonia which were in cultivation in 1820, B. nitida appears to be the only one which has survived. Col. Trevor Clarke and Mr. W. Earley were among the earliest to obtain hybrids of the fibrous-rooted type; the former produced among others Weltoniensis, the latter Digswelliana. There were other seedlings as well as introductions from foreign parts, including the glorious B. corallina from Brazil about 1845. B. fuchsoides, which came to us from New Grenada in 1846, became very popular for a time, and up to within the last thirty years formed a part of most collections of plants. The enormous development of the begonia in later years is too well known to be mentioned here.

THE CALCEOLARIA.

The calceolaria, which at the opening of the last half of the nineteenth century was of generally tall growth, and small flowered, has been carried to the other extreme. The plants of leading strains are now very dwarf, with dense clustered heads of bloom of large pouch-like corollas, in which the quality of shape which ruled a quarter of a century ago is to a large degree wanting.

THE CINERARIA.

The cineraria has passed through a similar experience, the somewhat tall growth and finely-shaped blossoms of a generation ago have given place to a dwarf, compact habit, and very large flowers, which, while in themselves striking, yet to a large extent lack the substance and symmetry of a former period. Mere size, both in the calceolaria and cineraria, may be said to rule; and yet, as if in protest against the uncouth dimensions of later developments, the original type, C. cruenta, is being cultivated, and already seedlings show a tendency to increase in form and size; while their tall habits and free-blooming characteristic make them desirable as conservatory plants. It seems as if the old way of improvement was being re-trodden in our day.

THE PRIMULA.

Some such experience appears to be going on in the case of Primula sinensis. While in the early fifties only the old but improved types of the red and white were grown, since then there has been an active time of intercrossing, with the result that the varieties have increased to a great extent, and colors which it was never anticipated by the old growers could be seen in the Chinese primrose, have been obtained, such as rich crimson, shades of lavender, etc.; and double forms have also been secured, so that the value of P. sinensis as a decorative agent is evidenced on every hand. Here also the old single type (not the original species) has been taken in hand, and there has been obtained a strain of very free blooming smaller single-flowered varieties, termed "Star" primulas, which are popular in many quarters. But any attempt to improve these seems likely to lead eventually to the improved forms to which a course of half a century's selection have led us.

THE FUCHSIA.

The fuchsia, which, as the late Mr. John Lee stated, was brought to London by a sailor at the end of the last century, and purchased and distributed by his father, yet remains a popular greenhouse plant, though now, probably, more employed for the decoration of the flower garden than in the house, and especially is this true of our London parks. The name of Edward Banks stands out most prominently as an improver of the fuchsia in the past, as that of James Lye does in the present. But many others have assisted in its development. Fuchsia coccinea appears to have been the only one known in 1820 (F. magellanica is now often grown under this name); corallina, corymbiflora, fulgens, and tripleylla are species we owe to the nineteenth century, and of these the Mexican fulgens is most widely cultivated. Lye's later improvements show free and vigorous habits of growth united with marvelous floriferousness. The fuchsia is a plant adapted to so many methods of usefulness that it is likely to remain in cultivation for another century to come.

THE ABUTILON.

No abutilon was known during the first quarter of the century, for the well known A. striatum did not come to us from Brazil until 1837, and the improvements shown in the new varieties raised from it belong to the last half of the century; so do such species as insigne, megapotanicum and the variegated leaved Thompsoni.

THE ACHIMENES.

The achimenes, once a much more popular subject among gardeners than it is in the present day, had one representative in this country at the beginning of the century—namely, A. coccinea. The violet A. longiflora was introduced in 1841, and this, with A. grandiflora, which appeared the following year, have largely given us the fine varieties cultivated in the present day. We thus owe the free-flowering achimenes to the century which has just closed.

THE AMARYLLIS.

The amaryllis (hippeastrum) is a subject which has undergone a remarkable transformation during the past century. Dean Herbert led the way, and there were always others who in greater or less degree carried on the work of improvement. It was an epoch-making period in the history of the flower when the Peruvian H. pardinum appeared in 1866. This was found to blend with the forms in cultivation, and in the hands of Messrs. Veitch & Sons there has originated a strain of great magnificence. The names of Chapman, Ker, Perkins and others are among the busy workers who are raising seedlings; but it would appear as if the limits of perfection had been nearly or quite reached.

THE COCKSCOMB.

It can scarcely be said that the crested cockscomb is holding its own as a stove and exhibition plant, though very fine examples are occasionally seen at flower shows held about the country. The introduction of the plumose form under the name of Celosia argentea, which has been considerably improved by selection, has furnished an admirable subject for summer bedding, as can be seen in some of the London parks. It is also of great value for house decoration.

THE LACHENALIA.

Though there were something like twenty species and varieties of lachenalia, including pendula and tricolor, in cultivation at the beginning of the century, it is only within the last twenty years that attempts have been made to produce new forms from seed, and the well known Nelsoni was one of the first to appear; other new forms have put in an appearance during the past ten years.

THE LANTANA.

The improved varieties of lantanas are also the products of the nineteenth century; indeed, several appeared during the close of its first half, and L. Cameron was then a leading greenhouse plant. Of late years a number of dwarf bushy forms have come over from the continent; but they do not appear to have taken the foremost position as greenhouse plants which was anticipated. They are also useful summer bedding subjects.

Veronica Andersoni and its allies are also worthy of notice as at one time popular greenhouse evergreen shrubs, but now more frequently seen in the border.

THE CARNATION.

The carnation and the chrysanthemum dominated at the close of the century. Page states, in 1817, in reference to Dianthus caryophyllus, "of these there were forty-five named sorts." In the following year the flower underwent considerable transformation, but all in the direction of the florist's varieties; and they were also leading on the picotee to better development as edged flowers. Maddocks, at the end of the eighteenth century, and Hogg, some years later, by their treatises helped to popularize the flower. By 1850 there were fine varieties such as S. B. Admiral Curzon, still at the head of its class. Puxley was at work with the carnation, and May with the picotee, while other honored names were proceeding on similar lines. Then came Dodwell, Turner, Douglas, etc. Mr. Ernst Benary, of Erfurt, sent us his German and fancy varieties. Then a few years subsequently Mr. Martin R. Smith began to raise seedlings, and especially selfs, yellowgrounds and fancies, and he is now the foremost raiser of the day. Mr. Turner and others did much to improve the winter-flowering varieties; and the section of Malmaison carnations has been materially added to. The carnation is now a very popular flower both in America and at home. The laced pinks with their striking colored margins and scented petals appear to be going out of cultivation, while the new race of biennial varieties known as Margarets are becoming increasingly popular.

THE CHRYSANTHEMUM.

The chrysanthemum was practically the outcome of the nineteenth century. During the first twenty years of it there were a dozen or so known varieties. Seeds were first saved in France, and then in Jersey, and at home; alterations and improvements in form and color resulted, and the first exhibition of the flower took place in 1846. In this year Mr. R. Fortune introduced the Chusan daisy, which may be said to have originated the race of pompon varieties; and in 1862 he sent home the first Japanese types. The latter, improved beyond all hope and promise, are now the dominant section; though the old incurved type has also been greatly improved of late years; though, as some think, at the expense of the exquisite symmetry of form which once prevailed. An early flowering section of Japanese varieties is rapidly becoming popular, while some of the varieties are largely grown as cut blooms for market purposes.

THE AURICULA. ETC.

The auricle holds its own; and such raisers as Lightbody, Heady, Traill, Douglas, Simonite, Woodhead, Horner and others have added during the last sixty years many fine varieties to the show section. The alpine varieties are the product of the last half of the century; Turner, Douglas, Phillips and others have assisted in their improvement with the best results. Its near ally, the gold-laced polyanthus, is, so far as choice named sorts are concerned, almost lost to cultivation, owing to the difficulty experienced in cultivating the choice varieties. The antirrhinum is still a popular flower, especially in the north, where the practice of naming varieties is still followed; and choice strains are generally of very fine quality. The anemone has ceased to be regarded as a florist's flower, despite its attractive vernal beauty.

BUFFALO.

Various Items.

The plant business is about wound up and what comes after this will feel like all profit. Business has been quite good, the many graduating classes having helped everybody. A look at Mr. Kasting's emporium a few nights ago would lead you to think there was an oversupply, but the commissioner tells me that they most all go. To show you how cold must have been the month of May, our paenies are only just now at their best. The writer gets so little downtown of late that he hardly keeps in touch with the craft.

W. A. Adams has leased his window and part of his counter to a firm of jewelers. This won't make much difference to Andy and his trade, for they know where he is and will stick to him. The North American Saengerfest meet here this week and it will bring 50,000 noble Teutons to our city, and oh, won't "Alt Nurnberg" at the Pan-Am. be busy for some days to come? This Village is the great resort for thousands of our best citizens, as well as the many distinguished visitors.

The writer had the pleasure a few hours ago to hand Mrs. William J. Bryan, of Nebraska, a handsome bunch of Paul Neyron roses. They will decorate the table while William J. and family dine in the German Village. We only do this to presidents and defeated candidates. He remarked with the sweetest of smiles, "Oh, what roses—and what a silvery hue on the petals." I replied: "Yes, sir! If them air roses was fur sale they would fetch gold!"

We have had an illustrious lot of visitors of late and none more gratifying to see than Mr. Ellwanger, of Rochester; Mr. G. L. Grant and the two Misses Grant, of Chicago. I must let Mr. Grant give his own opinions of the Pan-American. Mr. William Dreer on his road to California; Mr. Meehan, bound for Milwaukee; Mr. Charles Henderson, of New York; E. Hippard, of Youngstown, Ohio; F. T. Munson, New Haven, Conn.; L. H. Blind, of West View, Pa.

The club now meets weekly and progress is being made all along the line. Mr. Long is making a fine thing of his souvenir of the Buffalo convention. It is simply elegant in design and something that every florist in the land will be proud to own. What will make it especially valuable to the possessor as well as the advertiser is the fact that it will reach every one a week or so before they start for the convention. The committee on exhibits brought along two splendid silver cups which are to be awarded during the convention, one for the best display of cut flowers and the other for the best display of plants, and will be known as the Pan-American cups, but are offered by the Buffalo Florists' Club for the trade exhibit.

Pan-American Notes.

Warm weather with frequent rains has been most favorable for the improvement of all outside horticultural exhibits for the past week. The Landscape Department is nearing the completion of its work. A great number of large hydrangeas have been stood around the various courts. As these are showing their flower heads they are bound to make a fine appearance later in the season. The numerous borders lying between the waiks and the buildings are being filled up. Any amount of vines, such as Coclea scandens and Japanese hops, are being planted against the walls and pillars. We know how effective all this will be in a short time. The sloping banks in the sunken gardens have been laid out in some very beautiful designs and planted largely with geraniums. The vases have all been filled, which has added greatly to the general appearance. This has been a gigantic task, as there must be nearly a thousand of them.

In the Exhibits Department a very fine consignment of pineapples has been received from Florida and planted in the south conservatory, where it is a fair reproduction of a Florida pinery. Peter Henderson & Co. have added to their inside exhibit a number of large tubs of Boston ferns and a splendid collection of fancy leaf caladiums. The Court of Lilies and the Court of Cypress have at last been planted. Some difficulty has been met in getting these large basins to hold water. The Court of Cypress, in which is situated the cold basin, contains a very rare collection of the very best and finest nymphaeas. The Court of Lilies, or the Victoria Basin, has two Victoria Regia and two Victoria Trickerii, besides 24 boxes containing exotic nymphaeas. Like the nymphaeas in the outside lakes, these are all the exhibit of Henry A. Dreer. The building and preparation of the basins was very costly and the exhibit has been a great expense to Mr. Dreer, and we fervently hope the results will be most gratifying. The thousand or more nymphaeas planted on the margins of the Mirror Lakes and in the many lagoons are now flowering freely and present a beautiful appearance from the banks.

The greatest feature in outside exhibits this week has been the beds of hybrid perpetual roses. The writer will rather have some one else speak of their excellence. I can only say that it was with great gratification today that the venerable Mr. Ellwanger, of Rochester, and Mr. Dreer, of Philadelphia, looked at the bed of 500 Paul Neyron and the 500 Ulrich Brunner, and both exclaimed: "We never before have seen such a show of roses." At the risk of being thought egotistical I will say I don't think their equal has ever been seen in this country. I hope to have these illustrated shortly and shall be very glad to add to the illustration a few notes of just how they were managed.

There is also, in addition to those mentioned a bed of Jacques and a bed of mixed varieties from Ellwanger & Barry, Nelson Bogue, of Batavia, has eight smaller beds which have also been of great excellence, giving us thousands of blooms. It has been decidedly the feature of this week. There are only one or two beds of the nearly 200 yet vacant, and they will be filled up. The very extensive exhibit of Mr. F. R. Pierson arrived last week and was immediately put in the ground. This occupies the large beds that were earlier so gay with tulips and so much admired. They used up nearly 400 cannas, several hundred acahypha, besides a number of large musas and other plants for edging. One bed planted with Black Beauty canna and edged with variegated Arundo Donax will, I think, be a beauty.

The attendance is daily increasing, and I have no doubt about its reaching the hundred thousand mark some days of this week, and well it deserves it. There will be a splendid chance at the Pan-American for our florists to see a great number of new cannas. Henry A. Dreer, J. C. Vaughan, F. R. Pierson, C. W. Ward, Conard & Jones, Nathan Smith & Son, Henry Eichholz and W. G. Eisele are all exhibitors of new varieties.

Mr. Healy, park superintendent of Detroit, is here with a carload of palms and bedding plants and is laying out and planting an immense bed on the north side of the Horticulture Building. When completed this will be a grand and effective display.

In cut flower exhibits some very beautiful paeonies have been shown by C. W. Ward, Queens, N. Y.; Henry A. Dreer, Philadelphia; George T. Schuneman, Baldwin, L. I.; Keene & Foulk, Flushing, N. Y.; Charles Weston, an amateur of North Tonawanda, N. Y.; W. & T. Smith, Geneva; John Chauton & Son, Rochester; E. A. & W. K. Wood, West Newton, Mass.; Ellwanger & Barry, Rochester; Mrs. George W. Davis, Lancaster, N. Y.; Wm. F. Kastig, Buffalo, and several magnificent displays from Prof. John F. Covell, Buffalo South Park Botanic Gardens.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

DOUBLE-FLOWERING CRAB APPLE.

We present in this issue an engraving from a photograph taken recently of a specimen of the double-flowering crab apple in Lincoln Park, Chicago. This specimen is about seven feet high and when in bloom is a beautiful sight, the blooms presenting the effect of small, fully open double light pink roses at a short distance. The blooms are remarkably persistent and the branches of flowers could be most effectively used in decorative work. We believe it would pay any florist to have a few specimens on his grounds for the flowers supplied during the month of weddings, to say nothing of the decorative value of the tree in case the flowers should not be wanted.

PITTSBURG.

Our flower show has come and gone and it was a pronounced success. It lasted from noon till 10 p. m. of the 19th, and by reason of the excellence and the public demand it was continued till the afternoon of the 20th, then it was broken up and the flowers were sent to the different hospitals. It was gotten up by the Florists' and Gardeners' Club. It was a show of hardy flowers and free to the people. Our members worked hard and disinterestedly and brought in their own flowers and induced their neighbors to bring in or send their posies, and we had many fine exhibits from distant friends. Altogether it was the happiest kind of a gathering. Never before in the history of Pittsburg were so many hardy flowers seen together in one room.

On the morning of the 20th I made a business call at the office of a vigorously prominent gentleman in town and he remarked: "Well, I went to see your flower show yesterday, and it was the best I ever saw." In the course of a few minutes' conversation about it I mentioned that it was our maiden effort, there was no mercenary motive in it whatever, and, although the treasury of the club was pretty slim just now the members would cheerfully pay every penny of the expenses. His reply almost stunned me: "Why," he answered, "if it's money you need I can go out and get you $2,500 this afternoon if you wish me to." My thanks were profuse, but we do not need the money.

It was primarily a rose show, and there were many fine collections of roses exhibited. Ellwanger & Barry, of Rochester, N. Y., sent a collection of named varieties; the other named groups came from Mr. John Murdoch, Mrs. Watson, J. W. Elliott and Schenley Park, all local. But Mrs. A. King, Mr. Mellon, Mr. H. Negley, Mr. Frick and several others showed unnamed lots of fine flowers.

Paeonies were splendid and very numerous. The chief exhibitors were Ellwanger & Barry, John N. May, Summit, N. J., W. Elliott, Elliott Brothers, John Marron, A. Murdoch, Mrs. Watson, the three brothers Ludwig, J. R. Mellon and Schenley Park.

Henry A. Dreer sent a fine lot of nymphaea flowers, including the new James Brydon. Mr. Ernest Myers, of Beaver Falls, and Schenley Park also contributed liberally of the hardy water lilies from their ponds.

Prof. O. P. Medsger, of Salem, Ohio, went out into the woods there and got up a complete collection of all of the native ferns indigenous for miles around, dug them up and mossed them separately and placed them before us in the most beautiful condition and every one named. This was a superb collection and most instructive. And a gentleman from Beaver Falls sent all the native orchids that were in blossom. From the Carnegie Museum, through the kindness of Dr. Holland, the director, and the laborious exertions of John Shafer, the curator, and his assistants, 385 distinct species of native plants, all fresh and plainly labeled with typewritten names, were placed before us and gladdened the eyes and hearts of lovers of nature and students of botany.

From Mr. H. H. Hunnewell, of Wellesley, near Boston, came 56 distinct kinds of rhododendron blossoms, including hardy and tender sorts; they were most lovely and a revelation to us folks in the Smoky City, and we gave them a front table all to themselves. And we thank Mr. Hatfield, Mr. H.'s superintendent, for the excellent packing and fine condition in which the flowers arrived. Schenley Park had thirty varieties from its outdoor plantings.

Ellwanger & Barry sent a great many blooms of hardy shrubs, especially of weigelas, and from John Dunbar, assistant superintendent of the Rochester, N. Y., park, came a wonderful collection of blooms of trees and shrubs; in fact, in variety and number it was an eye-opener to most of us. Parsons & Sons, of Flushing, N. Y., sent sprays, named, of their vast collection of Japanese maples; they were more beautiful than blossoms, and when the show was over they were appropriated in Mr. Shaffer, botanical curator of the Carnegie Museum, who will dry them and mount them and then share them with Schenley Park. Messrs. Parsons also sent flowers of the rare Japanese Magnolias Watsoni, parviflora and hypoleuca, and other varieties, and sprays of rare oak.

Hardy perennials filled a major space. J. W. Elliott came from Cheswick with a big wagon load, including larkspur, foxgloves, poppies, Canterbury bells, pinks of many sorts, pentstemons, irises and a hundred other kinds. The Elliott brothers were also prominent in this class, and Schenley Park had an immense collection. Edward Gillett, of Southwick, Mass., had a fine lot of fire-pinks, Cypripedium spectabile, Dicentra eximia, feverfew, golden alyssum, etc. Henry A. Dreeer had the double Clematis recta, Incarvillea Delavayii, scabios, gypsophila and a splendid lot of Iris Koempferi. Mehan & Sons, of Germantown, sent blooms of perennials and so did Ellwanger & Barry, especially a fine named collection of German irises.

Our dear good friend, Mr. W. R. Smith, of the Botanical Gardens at Washington, sent a collection of cut flowers, including orchids, anthuriums, crinum, bignonias, yuccas, evergreen magnolia and others. Mr. A. Murdock showed a beautiful collection of orchid blossoms, including ocidium, odontoglossum, cattleya and dendrobium flowers. And Mr. Price, Mr. Laughlin's gardener, brought in a large specimen of Laelia purpurata in full bloom.

Mr. Fraser, Mr. Frick's gardener, showed a table of very beautiful gloxinias, and Randolph & McClements had a brilliant and exceedingly well grown hundred geraniums.

But the exhibition wasn't altogether a show of hardy flowers, some very beautiful carnations—sheaves of them, and greenhouse roses, also sweet peas and gladioli and encharis—were contributed by our local florists and others from a distance. Chief among these exhibitors were John N. May, Summit, N. J.; Mr. M. Nauman, Etna, Pa.; Theo. F. Becker, Neville Island; Fred Burki, Bellevue; Ernest Ludwig and Julius Ludwig, Allegheny; John Bader, Allegheny; Ernest Fisher, Castle Shannon; Joseph Heacock, Wyncote, and J. F. Gibbs & Sons, Woodville.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flowers coming into the city are gradually changing. The Brides and Maids have nearly all made their final bow; those that have not done so ought to with few exceptions. Peonies have fled and the simon pure outdoor-grown sweet peas are driving their indoor-started sisters to the wall. Carnations remain in full force and are moving a bit better than for the past fortnight. Good ordinary McGowan, Scott and Eldorado bring 50 cents to 81 per 100; while a few Lawson and Genevieve Lord bring 82 to 83 per 100. Sweet peas are fine and in over-supply; the price is 20 to 30 cents per 100. Roses are fairly active. Beauties, Kaiserins, Meteors and Liberty are all good for the season; the prices are sagging a little.

Various Items.

The principal planting about Horticultural Hall is finished. The front entrance is ornamented by the years 1876 on one side and 1901 on the other, made of Echeveria secunda glauca, with a maltese cross formed of a variety of alternantheras and echeverias. Across the carriage drive are the cactus beds containing some very large plants; here also are beds of crotons and scarlet geraniums, the latter looking remarkably well. The parterre or sunken garden at the opposite side of the hall is not yet at its best, the cool weather preventing the foliage plants, which form the bulk of the planting, from coloring. One cannot but miss here the rare skill of the master hand whose touch was seen on this spot for twenty-five years.

The Eastern Plant Company has purchased two greenhouses, each 20x70 feet, at Norwood, Pa. They are also building three houses at Fifty-second and Baltimore streets, in this city. One of these houses is to be 12x70 for palms and ferns, and two 18x70 for roses.

Stephen Mortensen is adding 100 feet each to two of his houses at Southampton, Pa. One of these is planted with Beauties and the other, Liberty. He is also trying 100 plants of Robert Scott rose.

Henry I. Faust, of Merion, has two houses planted with asters for cut flowers. He uses Semple's for his center benches and Queen of the Market for his side tables. His houses were all full of good, thrifty, marketable stock.

Mrs. John Plender, Twenty-sixth and Girard avenue, has been very busy this season. It is a dark day indeed when Mrs. Plender's store is not brightened by a funeral order.

George E. Campbell, 3601 Germantown avenue, had an exceptionally fine lot of rubbers plunged in the frame. His force is hard at work preparing the chrysanthemum beds for the young plants, which are in good shape in thumb pots. Boston fern has done well here.

Henry Engler, Narberth, Pa., has a nice lot of white Phlox Drummondii in bloom.

Albert Woltemate held an auction sale at his store of unclaimed boards and overgrown decorative plants on Tuesday.

Penock Bros. had a pretty store window decoration of pond lilies, pink gladioli, ferns and small caladiums this week.

Krueger Bros., at Narberth, Pa., found the raising of small vegetable plants a profitable addition to their spring business.

Mrs. A. M. Banmann, Pulaski and Manheim streets, John Holt, manager, has found S. A. Nutt the very best scarlet geranium for outdoor bedding. This place has had a prosperous season.

The seedsmen have been placing a good many young roses among the private gardeners this month. They say there will be no disease among Lilium Harrisii bulbs this year. Let us hope they are right.

"When the seller seeks the cash
For his grower's latest sash;
Just say with a bright smile:
I have a little pile, I have a little pile,
But it's not for you, my friend,
And on that you can depend,
But soon I'll fix you up in style;
Just wait a little while, wait a little while."

Among the Growers.

The doings of those growers who have achieved success in their profession are always interesting and the writers have gathered a few notes from two brief visits in opposite directions.

Joseph Heacock, Wyncote, Pa., rose and palm grower, has moved an im-ense quantity of palms this season. His stock of Areca lutescens is very large. There are some good 8-inch plants but the greater number are in 6-inch pots or smaller. All are in vigorous condition. Kentias Belmoreana and Forsteriana are here in great numbers. Some of the latter variety are in 12 and 8-inch pots—made up plants—a large specimen with three smaller ones, but most of these plants are grown singly and like the areca are in the smaller sizes. There are a limited number of Latania borbonica and Cocos Weddelliana. The latter are to be grown into 3-inch pots, made up plants, larger sizes proving unsuitable on account of the slow growth of this variety. The stock is all clean and healthy. The shading used is white lead and gasoline, the latter considered practically identical with benzine.

Five houses are planted with young Beauties, as many more remain to be filled with this variety; two and one half each with Brides and Maids and one with Meteor. The latter variety has given excellent results the past season. All the young plants look well, the Beauties now planted especially so. Mr. Heacock noticed an excellent demand for young Beauty plants this season.

Robert Scott & Son, Sharon Hill, Pa., growers and importers of Easter plants, have most of their roses in solid beds, unlike the last named establishment, Beauty being the exception. Liberty looked particularly well here, also Robert Scott, which has improved greatly in appearance since last seen eighteen months ago. A feature is the collection of new roses on trial, the most interesting one being Florence Pemberton, a variety of extraordinary vigor. The date and place of this future debutante's appearance have not been settled.

A house of Kaiserins planted at Easter had just yielded its first crop of flowers. This house is to be filled with Crimson Ramblers at Christmas for Easter blooming. The Ramblers are now making strong canes in the field. One large house is being glazed for carrying dormant roses, and three small ones are to be built this summer. PHIL.

NEW YORK.

Where are you going during vacation? This is the great question of the day among florists here, and of course the unanimous reply is "Buffalo and Niagara." Business is at its usual first of July standard. There has been considerable shipments of roses sent the past week to Pittsburg and several places in Connecticut; some of the folks in those places must have been busy. One or two of the New York florists have been busy on out-of-town weddings; in one case a special car was provided for the bouquets, etc.

The stores of all degrees might as well be closed early for what scraps of business there are: there seems to be no inclination to do so, not until after the Fourth. Very likely Chicago's famous Palmer House barber shop will be outdone in the way of glitter when Fleischman opens his store out there. Joe will probably go in for dazzling western eyes; better look out.

All hands feel sorry for Fred Smythe, whose wife and son died a week ago. Fred was preparing to spend a happy and prosperous season at Newport with those whom he suddenly lost.

We hear rumors of combinations and concentrations in connection with the New York Cut Flower Company; everything seems to tend toward organization nowadays. The Cut Flower Company is in a good location, but somewhat cramped for room.

The old cut flower market at Thirty-fourth street is about on its last legs; the principal growers there are casting about to either open a store uptown and put a man in charge or scatter themselves among the wholesalers. Some of them have become so accustomed to the Bohemian gatherings held in the restaurant below every morning that they will find it very hard to break away. The Lord knows what will become of some of the small growers attending this market. I met one of them recently and he informed me that his profit on 500 Van Stions this season was exactly 10 cents. If you care to hear hard luck stories emanating from smiling faces visit this market at 6 a. m.

Thorley's closing of his Fifth avenue store for the summer is a mere illustration of what that great street is during dogdays; every house on it and near is shut up tight, and there are days when scarcely a soul can be seen promenading this, the wealthiest avenue in the world! It is a question of making money while the sun doesn't shine so brightly there, and whatever the retailer gets he well deserves.

There were never so many buildings being torn down in the history of the city as there are at the present time. The city is being transformed. Business centers are being moved, and of course the florist is also affected. Quite a rum-pus is being made over the introduction of reserved seats at 5 cents each in Central Park. Politics nibbles at and tries to swallow everything here; it chokes the New York department of parks—they have not yet finished planting out the few miserable bedding plants yearly seen in our parks, and it is the first of July! No decent gardener can long remain in the employment of the parks here. It would seem that the whole system is but a menagerie where man is likened to the quadrupeds. Some day it is to be hoped New York will wake up and see the low position her public parks occupy in the hands of fakes and politicians.

The American Rose Society will hold its show in Newport, R. I., July 2 and 3, and it is expected that it will be well worth traveling some distance to see.

Ernst G. Asmus, having covered all his grounds with glass, is reported to have bought extensively elsewhere with a view of building more. Any one who can produce the quality Ernst does can afford to spread out to an unlimited degree despite low prices and universal grumbling. J. I. D.

BOSTON.

Trade Conditions.

The next to the last week of June made a very good market for all the first-class material that could be found and a distinctly second-class market for second-class goods; third-class goods cut no figure at all. This makes it look as if weddings and school graduations were to be credited with most of the business and the best part of that idea is that we can expect just one more week of it. Saturday was a poor day for business, which may remind you that schools do not usually hold exercises upon that day, but I do not know that weddings are any respecter of the days of the week, even if they do seem a little partial to certain calendar months.

The call for very best red roses was not so marked, but medium grades sold readily; outdoor Jacks were plentiful, however, and kept prices very reasonable. Such a rush of peonies never was seen: Mrs. David Fisher broke the record with 1,500 blossoms in one day. For some reason most of the crop came to maturity during a very few days. Always something to hother the grower, no matter what his crop may be.

Various items are off crop. But they tell me "Billy" Good (no one will know who I mean unless I say Billy) is to be married soon. He can hardly be classed as one of Mr. Walsh's graduates spoken of last week, but he shall be given a first-class diploma just the same.

J. S. MANSTER.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The weather here the past week has been very hot and dry, and we are very much in need of rain. The effect of this dry spell is beginning to tell on stock.

Roses of all kinds are very poor and only a few of them can be classed as choice. Replanting has begun in some places and other places will follow soon, which will make stock scarce for some little time. Just now stock is in good supply, but the only demand is for choice stock, which is hard to find.

Carnations are beginning to show the effects of the summer heat, though a good many first-class blooms are still coming in. They are small but are of good color.

Sweet peas are as they were last week, a regular glut, and the wholesale houses are crowded with them every morning and large numbers are left unsold.

Candidum lilies have been plentiful but are about over. They were not much in demand and more of them went to the dump than to the dealer.

The prices on stock the past week were like this: Roses, the best, $3.00 per 100, and down as low as 1 cent each; carnations, $1.00 for fancy; common, 25 to 50 cents per 100; candidum lilies, 50 cents per dozen stalks; snlax, 15 cents per string. This is all that can be said about the market the past week, as almost any price would buy the stock in large quantities.

Notes.

John J. C. Ernst, of Henry Ernst & Son, Washington, Mo., was in town the past week buying supplies.

A. Y. Ellison, of Ellison & Tesson, went to St. Joseph, Mo., a week ago to decorate for a swell wedding at that place. Arthur outdid himself, according to the press reports from that city. After the work was done Arthur went out looking for bowling alleys and bowlers, but none could be found—that is, regulation.

Mr. Felter, on Lexington avenue, is building a large new house, 25x100, which is about completed. Mr. Felter has had a very successful season.

Mr. Bruecker, on Maroon avenue, will build two new houses, 18x100, this summer for carnations. Mr. Bruecker sent in some very fine stock the past season and has made quite a reputation as a grower of fancy carnations.

H. M. Schisler, of Schisler-Cornell Seed Co., has returned home from the seed trade convention, held in Rochester, N. Y.

F. H. Weber, better known as "Fritz," was married last Thursday to one of the West End girls. Many presents were sent the newly married couple by their friends. The bowling club did not fail to remember its old-time member with something that gives comfort to both.

The transportation committee has the names of twenty-five florists who have signified their intention of attending the convention. They are: F. C. Weber, Mrs. Weber, Misses Add and Dora Weber, Herman Weber, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Meinhardt and two sisters, Fred Ammann, E. W. Guy, C. C. Sanders, J. W. Kunz, C. A. Kuehn, John Connon, A. Y. Ellison, Emil Schray, F. M. Ellis, Theo. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Maas, Carl Beyer, J. J. Beneke and A. J. Mohr.

The bowlers who will represent St. Louis in the bowling contest at Buffalo are as follows: A. Y. Ellison, C. A. Kuehn, Carl Beyer, J. J. Beneke, John W. Kunz, E. W. Guy, F. C. Weber, C. C. Sanders, F. M. Ellis and Theo. Miller. From the above six of the best bowlers will be selected as the team to bowl in the contest; so look out for us, as we are out for everything in sight.

Arthur Blome, representing the George Wittbold Company, Chicago, has been in town introducing their famous Nephrolepis Wittboldii.

Bowling.

Only four members of the bowling club were at the alleys Monday night. Three of the team that will roll at Buffalo made an average of 170, which is pretty good rolling. Mr. Ellison rolled fairly well for a beginner. The scores were as follows:

	1	2	3	Tot. Av.
A. Y. Ellison.....	169	183	160	512
C. A. Kuehn.....	189	171	160	520
J. J. Beneke.....	178	175	165	519
F. M. Ellis.....	136	127	146	439

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Trade Notes.

On the 21st this section was visited by a severe wind and rain storm, which did considerable damage to trees and crops in general. The heaviest part did not pass over the city and fortunately most of the florists escaped without injury. All except those in the north end, but they suffered only slightly. At Baur & Smith's a barn was twisted and about fifty panes of glass were broken. At E. A. Nelson's about the same number of panes were blown from his new unfinished houses. The parks suffered a good deal in trees being blown down, etc. During the storm a few hail stones pattered on the glass, which made our hearts leap into our throats, but fortunately they were few and not very large, so no damage resulted. We needed the rain badly, as it had not rained a good shower for a couple of weeks, but we don't care to have it just that way. On the night of the 22nd there was another very heavy rain, but there was no wind with it and consequently no damage.

Business is about at a standstill, nobody is doing anything except funeral work, and not much of that. Prices are of course down to rock bottom, and so is the quality in most cases. What good stock there is usually finds buyers, while the large quantities of poor grade stuff goes to waste. Flora Hill and E. Crocker are the best carnations coming in now. The latter variety is regaining its former friends around here and several growers have been heard to say that they failed to propagate any next spring, but they must have some next fall to plant. There is no outdoor stock coming at present.

Replanting of roses and planting of mums has been going on on most of the places, and stock generally looks fine. There is going to be a great showing of mums at the show this fall if present indications materialize.

The Indianapolis Flower and Plant Company have torn away four small houses to make room for two fine large houses.

A. Palud has moved into his new office and looks much more comfortable than he did in his small old one.

Building at E. A. Nelson's and J. Hartje's places is going along satisfactorily.

The next meeting of the State Florists' Association will be held on July 2 at the Commercial Club rooms, and a full attendance is desired as final arrangements are to be made for the annual outing.

On June 20 Mr. and Mrs. A. F. J. Baur start for Buffalo to remain ten days. They will also visit relatives and friends at Erie, Pa., before returning home.

There will likely be a good delegation from here to the S. A. F. and O. H. convention, as several have announced their intention of going. A. B.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Conditions have changed but little from last week. There are still oceans of flowers and but few good ones among them. In roses $5 seems to be about the top price for the best and $1.00 to $1.50 for carnations, with rapid jumps downward to rates by the armful or wagon load on the poorer grades. A clean up of carnations at 5 cents a bunch is now considered a pretty good sale.

The school closings on Thursday and Friday are expected to help a little locally and we hope it will. Local trade has been positively disheartening of late and the fakir has been the only one who has made any money.

Paeonies are the most satisfactory flower now in the market. Good flowers are to be had in quantity and when needed at $3 to $5 per 100. This is the cold storage stock which has been kept in excellent condition.

The best roses are Kaisers and Meeters and in red carnations America is holding up its reputation.

Various Items.

At the club meeting last Friday evening it was decided to have the picnic on Tuesday, July 23, at Reising's grove in Riverside. Another meeting will be held July 19. The committee is rapidly perfecting arrangements for the affair. The transportation committee reported progress and will probably have arrangements completed before the next meeting.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Weinboer left last Saturday by the Pennsylvania road for New York whence they sailed Monday on a Hamburg-American liner for a three or four months' trip to Europe. They will visit Paris, Holland, Belgium and the principal cities in Germany.

Another European pilgrim is Otto Wittbold, of the Geo. Wittbold Co., who is en route for a visit to Belgium and England.

It is reported in the daily press that Mrs. J. E. Steinfeld, wife of the florist, has received a gift of $50,000 in cash from an unknown party to whom she had shown some kindness in the past.

Wilson Tiplady, Joliet, was a visitor last Tuesday.

Bowling.

In the eighth series of league games played last Tuesday evening the Wholesalers won three games from the Growers, and the Retailers took three from the Seedsmen. The latter failed to appear on the scene and lost the games by default. But the Retailers put up some scores that would have been hard to beat anyway. Three of those dollar prizes were plucked, two by F. J. Hauswirth with scores of 214 and 218, and one by Geo. Asmus, with 205. Following are the scores:

BEDDING ROSES.

At the Pan-American Exposition, Buffalo, there are numerous beds of roses now in bloom, and among them is a bed of Ulrich Brunners that is undoubtedly the finest bed of roses ever seen in America. It is a sheet of magnificent blooms and is a sight worth a long trip to see. A bed of Paul Neyron is also splendid, and some beds of Jacks are fine, but the Brunners are simply wonderful.

They are certainly a grand testimonial to the skill of William Scott, and we are pleased to be able to say he has promised to tell the readers of the REVIEW just how he accomplished such results.

A bed of Crimson Ramblers is now a forest of buds and in a very short time will be a gorgeous sight.

The way the people flock to these beds and admire them shows the great interest the general public takes in this effort to give the rose its proper position in the garden and the results will surely be far reaching.

The exposition as a whole is all that has been promised, and the electrical display at night is alone worth all the trouble and expense of a visit. We shall next week endeavor to give you in detail our impressions of the exposition gathered during a four days' stay.

CANADIAN HORTICULTURAL ASSOCIATION.

The date of the convention of the above association to be held in London, Ont., has been fixed for Monday and Tuesday, the 5th and 6th of August, with probably the 7th thrown in for recreation and enjoyment. This date was decided on for various important reasons, among which may be mentioned the following—viz., the London Old Boys' Association will have their annual meeting there during the same week, and there will be cheap rates from almost all over Canada. The London Horticultural Society hold their annual summer flower show on Tuesday, Aug. 6; the S. A. F. will have its convention from the 6th to the 10th at Buffalo and members of the C. H. A. will be able to take in part of the S. A. F. meeting and the Pan-American on the same trip.

This appears to be a combination of fortuitous circumstances that should make it comparatively easy and inexpensive for every florist in Canada to attend at least their own trade convention and is an opportunity which ought to be eagerly seized by even the "small man" to find out the latest ideas and improvements without which he cannot expect to meet the demands of his customers for better things. It leaves him with absolutely no valid excuse for staying at home, and he will be amply repaid in the future for the small amount of money spent at the time. Program of the convention will be published shortly and may be had on application to the secretary, A. H. Ewing, Berlin, Ont. The opening session will be at 2:30 p. m. Monday, Aug. 5.

BOSTON.

On account of the new hall not being ready for occupancy the Massachusetts Horticultural Society was obliged to abandon the rose and strawberry show scheduled for June 20 and 21.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—The American Park and Outdoor Art Association is holding its annual convention in this city this week. The program included many valuable and interesting papers on subjects connected with the work of the association, and it was interspersed with numerous drives about the city and other courtesies extended by the local people. The organization has accomplished much good and a goodly share has been done by the Women's Auxiliary during its one year's existence.

OMAHA, NEB.—At the last meeting of the Nebraska and Iowa Florists' Society the name was shortened to Nebraska Florists' Society. R. H. Davy gave an account of his trip through Oklahoma and Indian Territory.

The Market.

The hot weather still continues, and stock in consequence is getting poorer. Business though for the past week has been much better. Prices have held stiffer and stock is fairly well sold out. Roses are in good demand with scarcely enough good ones to go around. They bring from 2 to 4 cents. Sweet peas are fine but slow sale at 25 cents per 100. Carnations are still coming in large quantities, but owing to better demand, especially for white, they are cleaned up nicely and at fair prices. Paeonias are done for about here, but there are still some being shipped to this market from the north. They sell from 35 to 50 cents per dozen, with fair demand.

Various Notes.

Several heavy wind storms has passed over these parts, but as yet have not heard of any florist who has been damaged much.

Park Superintendent B. P. Critchell is in Milwaukee attending the meeting of park superintendents, which is being held there. He will also spend a few days in Chicago. C. J. OLMER.

CHESTNUT HILL HORT. SOCIETY.

The regular stated meeting of the Chestnut Hill Horticultural Society was held on the 11th, the president, John T. Morris, presiding. There was a large number of articles offered in competition. Several very handsome collections of outdoor roses, making it very hard for the judges to decide the award in this class. The premiums were awarded as follows:

- For best quart of strawberries—To John McNeil, gardener to C. W. Henry.
- Best collection of outdoor roses, each variety named and in separate vases—First to William Robertson, gardener to J. W. Pepper.
- Best collection of herbaceous cut blooms and flowering shrubs—To Hans Reuter, gardener to C. W. Henry.
- One-half peck of peas—To Harry Harris, gardener to Mrs. R. G. Feil.
- Three heads of lettuce—To John Little, gardener to J. Lowler Welsh.
- Best quart of cherries—To John McNeil, gardener to C. W. Henry.

The judges made special mention of the exhibit of peas by Wm. Robertson, nectarines by Hans Reuter and spinach shown by John Little, also a collection of thirty-five varieties of Paeonia chinensis exhibited by the Andorra Nurseries.

The society offers a special premium for the meeting of September 10 of $10, for the best collection of cactus and show dahlias. J. H. H.

ALEXANDRIA, IND.—J. G. Sippel and E. W. Marland, of Chicago, have purchased the greenhouses of J. S. Sneathen. The new firm have ordered a large shipment of palms and ferns from Chicago and are now busily engaged erecting a palm house, which will also be used as a salesroom and office. They are also planning the erection of several additional houses this season.

No special rates will be made by the Buffalo hotels for convention week except to large parties. Below will be found a list of the leading hotels with the rates per day for rooms on the European plan. WHO CAN SUGGEST A WAY?

Being a lover of flowers and of florists you will excuse me for writing in the latter's behalf. I am not interested peculiarly with any florist, and only grow for pleasure and not for profit, consequently I should not be questioned as to motive.

When one looks at the enormous advance in everything a florist must pay out money for the question arises, is he getting a fair advance in the prices he obtains for his flowers? I fear not. In building a house the cost of glass is more than double what it was three years ago, iron pipe double, lumber also (especially express) much dearer. In running his house coal and labor are at least 25 per cent higher, and sundries to which there is no end are higher.

I do not propose to suggest how he is to remedy this, but concerted action should do it. W. A. PROCTOR, Cincinnati, O.

MARION, IND.—Trade in cut flowers and bedding plants has been excellent this spring, breaking all previous records. Gunnar Teilmann is planting three houses to chrysanthemums, about 5,000 plants, and will grow them two flowers to the plant; so look out for 10,000 good Marion mums this fall. He has finished planting two houses and the later varieties will be all planted within another week.

OSHKOSH, WIS.—A heavy hailstorm did much damage here June 13. At the greenhouses of Isaac Miles a good deal of glass was broken.

CHARLES CITY, IOWA.—The Sherman Nursery Company is about to build a large greenhouse on its nursery grounds.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The June show of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was very fine in roses and strawberries. In roses D. McFarlane took two first premiums, Wm. Scott one and Howard Nichols one. In herbaceous flowers firsts were taken by L. A. Martin and Francis Gibson. In strawberries Wm. Scott won two firsts and John Elliott one. Wm. Scott was first for collection of vegetables.

A meeting of the society was held after the exhibition; President Smith was in the chair. Invitation from the Florists' Club of New York City to accompany them on their annual outing to Locust Point, L. I. on July 8th. Secretary read schedule for November show, accepted and referred to Executive Committee. The Secretary was instructed to communicate with all donors to last year's show and ask their co-operation for the success of this year.

Mr. William Harvey of Ossining was elected to membership, and J. Donald, of Greystone, Yonkers, proposed. Communication from Mrs. Vandervilt read and referred to Treasurer for action.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

We have had all kinds of weather since Decoration Day. The past few days have been as hot as Tophet, and the commencements all having taken place, has resulted in an exodus to the summer resorts of all those who can flee from the city's heat for the cool lake breezes.

As for flowers, well, there is a glut at last. Carnations are in full crop. First class blooms, only, are in demand, the inferior flowers finding their way to the dump. Roses are not so bad; although very plentiful nearly all the first-class blooms have found a ready sale.

Out-of-town commences have helped in a very gratifying manner to keep the roses from accumulating.

The demand this spring for bedding plants has been the best ever known, and while the bedding is not yet completed, it is rapidly drawing to a close. The first of next month will see its finish.

Activity in the replanting of violet and rose houses is already noticed in some establishments and will continue until all rose, violet and mum houses are planted. G. F. C.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Chronicle.

CALADIUM MIXTUM ERIBENSES.—For general decorative purposes either in the store or the dwelling this species of caladium cannot be excelled, and in places where much indoor decoration is in vogue, the plant should be grown in quantity. If potted in small pots, it forms a companion plant to the more delicate C. argyrites, while if repeatedly shifted into larger pots, and the largest tubers selected, specimens 2 feet high and diameter may be grown, as useful in vases and in other ways. C. minus erubescens is one of the specialties of Mr. Kemp, the gardener at Stoke Park, Slough, who uses it largely in domestic decoration. Half-decayed horse manure rubbed through the meshes of a ½-inch sieve forms about one-half of the potting compost, the other half being made up of turfy loam and a small quantity of silver-sand.

STREPTOSOLEN JAMESONI.—There are four plants of this beautiful greenhouse plant at present growing in beds in the Conservatory, Kew. Two of these are in loam exclusively, and two others have neat. Those in the loam are blooming very much more freely than the others. If the use of pure loam will always have the same result, this information will be valuable.

The Gardeners' Magazine.

ACTION OF BACTERIA ON BONES.—It is regarded as certain that bacteria play an important part in the dissolution of bones, so that if rapid dissolution is desired it follows that the bacteria should be afforded every opportunity of doing their work. Some experiments have, observes the Lancet, shown that when sifted bone-meal was inoculated with various bacteria, and kept wet, a remarkable resolution of the constituents of the bone, including the inorganic as well as the organic matters, took place. The latter resolved themselves, as might be expected, into simpler compounds of the type of ammonia, but the most curious results consisted in the fact that the soluble phosphate of lime was converted into soluble phosphoric acid. The experiments were confirmed by oats grown in large pots with bone-meal and inoculating with different bacteria. The yield of oats was far greater when the bone meal was inoculated in this way. Several species of bacteria were employed with results which varied widely.

FERTILIZERS FOR CARNATIONS.—In the report of the National Carnation and Florist Society appears an interesting record of experiments carried on at the Wye Agricultural College. Following is a brief statement of the course of procedure by which the finest blooms were produced. In the case of Quentin Durward the best results were obtained from the mixture of "three ounces of phosphates, one-third of an ounce of potash, and half an ounce of nitrogen" with the soil in each eight-inch pot. Sulphate of ammonia and nitrate of soda were used as the sources of nitrogen; carbonate of potash was used as the source of potash, and the phosphates used were superphosphate of lime and phosphatic guano in the proportion of five to three. Plants grown with the aid of these fertilizers are described as producing a vigorous growth and finely developed blooms. Excellent results were also obtained from using one ounce of phosphates, one-third of an ounce of potash, half an ounce of nitrogen, and one-fifth of an ounce of sulphate of iron, the plants being remarkable for the depth of color of both flowers and "grass." The record of the experiments with Aglaia is not so clear as could be desired, but we gather that the use of a combination similar to that in the second of the two experiments mentioned in referring to Quentin Durward was highly beneficial. In this case, however, the nitrate was applied in the form of sulphate of ammonia and nitrate of soda in three doses, between April 10 and June 15, while the sulphate of iron was given in two doses, the dates of application having been May 7 and June 15.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.—R. W. Carter, manager of a market garden in West Springfield, has applied for a patent on an apparatus for sterilizing soil. It is said that through the use of his device 1,000 cubic feet of soil can be heated to 200 degrees and thereby thoroughly sterilized at a cost of but $1.50. There is certainly a future for the apparatus if it does all that is claimed for it.

BATAVIA, ILL.—The Williams & Sons Co. greenhouse plant has been sold to Oscar Anderson for $8,000. The houses will be removed. This was once an important growing establishment, sending many flowers to the Chicago market fifteen or eighteen years ago.

ATLANTA, GA.—The petition of John A. Lambert to join the Lambert Floral Co. from using his name in its title was heard by Judge Lumpkin June 8 and the injunction denied.

ST. CLAIR, MINN.—Thos. J. Ward, proprietor of the St. Clair Nursery, was recently married, the bride being Miss B. A. Whitney.

WHITESBORO, N. Y.—John Owens is building a large greenhouse at his place on upper Main street.

PORT CLINTON, O.—Payne & Woner are building a new greenhouse.

ST. PAUL.

On the 18th a hail storm lasting about ten minutes went over the greenhouses of Fritz Franke, C. Bussjaeger and others, breaking hundreds of lights of glass. The storm came between 7 and 8 o'clock in the evening, straight northwest, and was perfectly dry, there being no rain either before or after the storm. It was simply a phenomenon. Some of the hailstones were horn-shaped, 2 1/2 and 3 inches long, weighing 3 and 4 ounces and more. No signs of the storm were visible and everybody was outdoors; the old folks reading on the porches; the younger generation playing base and other balls on the streets. The rush for home was great and horses on the roads started a wild runaway pace. Sweet peas and other soft stuff was considerably damaged and looked like torn dresses.

The florists who were hardest hit are: H. Krinke, between 400 and 500 lights, insured; Warrendale Floral Co., same; F. Schulze, between 300 and 400 lights, no insurance; L. L. May & Co., exact number not stated, but large; C. Bussjaeger, between 250 and 300 lights, insured; F. Franke, between 40 and 50 lights, insured.

E. Rowe, a vegetable gardener, with large cucumber houses, suffered most, as lots of the trailing plants were simply cut to pieces.

C. BUSSJAEGER.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

Since Memorial Day business has been good, until last week, when there was a decided falling off.

Nearly all the growers have thrown out their old roses and finished replanting, consequently roses are scarce. The earlier planted houses are looking well and soon will be able to give a crop. This applies especially to Beauties.

The Van Bochove Bros., who have finished planting, have this year devoted two of their new houses to Beauties, which are looking fine.

Carnations are very plentiful; the demand for them is lessening every day. Field crops are looking well and there has been just about the right amount of rain to make nice stocky plants for benching early.

We had a visit from Mr. Skidelsky, of Philadelphia, who reports business good. The cheery smile he is wearing is ample evidence that "the sun of bright prosperity is shining all over him."

Celery men are already shipping their first crop, which is of a superior quality. There is a large and ever increasing demand for this toothsome summer delicacy, quantities being shipped as far south as New Orleans. The later crops are also looking well. RIBES.

BELLEFONTAINE, OHIO.—Miss Maud Fichthorn, who has had a flower stand in this city for the past eight years, has sold her business to Poole & Purllant. The latter have started to build another house, 16x44. Not very large, but they say it is all they care to stand for at the present price of glass.

GREENFORD, OHIO.—The demand for bedding plants this spring was good; everything sold out clean. There is considerable building being done here this spring, M. C. Clay building one house for carnations and Frank Knauf one for bedding plants.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Care of Beds.

Having so much work on our beds this spring it occurs to me that a word or two of advice might be beneficial to some who have the charge of these. The real gardener knows pretty well how to manage the flower beds, but too many of them are left to the care of very inexperienced help, and it is not always the help's fault, for many in our city insist that the coachman or hired man shall water "the flowers," as they call them, every night, as well as the lawn. Now this is a great mistake and a little watering, or just sufficient to bake the soil, is much worse than none at all. Every gardener knows there is nothing like hoeing. Look at our experience with a few carnation plants: Planted early in May and only two or three rains, maybe, during the summer, with no artificial watering at all and yet we produce some good plants by August because they were continually cultivated.

There are some beds that can be watered copiously and often. Particularly is this true of cannas and caladiums. They even are not much benefited after they have made a good growth but for the first month after they are planted out they should have a copious watering at least twice a week and be hoed the following day. The hoeing should always occur at the time when the soil is in that condition between the wet and the dry, and not be allowed to bake. A bed of verbenas should have by this time made such growth that unless we have a very dry time they will need no further watering. A bed of geraniums, supposing we have a rain once a week, will scarcely need any watering, but if you have been without rain then once a week is enough for them.

When you do water, water thoroughly. That is, make sure that you apply enough to go down at least three or four inches, and then follow the next day with a hoeing and then leave them alone. There are many things to do in the garden to help besides continual sprinkling. One thing is keep all old flowers picked off. This will apply to geraniums, petunias, verbenas and cannas; in fact, all our flowering plants, and particularly to geraniums. It is the going to seed that exhausts the plant and all flowers that are past their beauty should be picked off, not only for the health of the plant but for tidiness' sake.

Roses.

People complain that their hybrid perpetual roses after one burst of bloom in June give up flowering until late again in the fall. My experience is that if they have good soil and sufficient water that that is not so, but the flowers should be picked off the moment they are past their best. It is not the break from the strong shoots at the bottom from which you are so likely to get flowers, but the upper eyes or shoots will almost certainly give you more flowers, the same as the American Beauty does when disbudded in the fall. If hybrid perpetual roses could only be made perpetual, as their name implies, how many more would be planted and how much more satisfactory they would be, and I think they can be under correct and liberal treatment.

Tuberous Begonias.

Tuberous rooted begonias are often considered undesirable for out of doors. As I have had occasion to mention several times, a few of the most brilliant beds ever seen, not excepting a bed of geraniums, were of tuberous rooted begonias. They need lots of water, but it should never be applied as you would in the ordinary way—overhead or by sprinkling. Take the hose and let it run thoroughly among them and let it wet the soil between each plant. This will not only prevent the soil from baking but will well water the roots. I hope you have tried some and if well taken care of you will not be disappointed.

Dahlia.

Don't forget to stake your dahlias as soon as planted out. Remember these are plants that want an abundance of water. As soon as they have started into growth you should mulch them with two inches of manure for at least a radius of eighteen inches round the plant. If planted in a bed this means mulch the whole bed. No light sprinkling overhead does for these but a good soaking two or three times a week.

Herbaceous Plants.

There are not many herbaceous plants that should be watered in ordinary seasons because they are so well established and the roots go deep; still I have seen seasons, last year notably, when the dry time very much hurt many of them, especially the perennial phlox. I will say again, no light sprinkling is any good, but they should be thoroughly soaked.

Gladioli.

Our gladioli also suffered very much last summer for want of water with no means of giving it. The spikes will be better, the flowers finer in every way if the soil can be kept moist. If you have the means of irrigating do so by all means and you will be well paid with the quality of blooms.

Trees and Shrubs.

I have a good opportunity this year to notice the failure with a good many deciduous trees and shrubs that were planted early in May. A great many deciduous trees have vitality enough left in them to send out a few leaves, but as soon as the hot weather comes they dry up. You see them sprouting out their buds and leaves and you think they are all safe. Now is the time they collapse. All these should be well looked after during the hot summer months. I believe greatly in mulching, whether it be an Austrian pine or a maple tree for the first season. A good mulching of any stable manure or two inches of spent hops, then you can water them with real benefit, for evaporation does not take place and the ground is continually moist.

Sowing Grass Seed.

It might be worth mentioning here that it is often considered impracticable

Violets.

We are planting our violets this week. This is a little later than the date when some of the best growers begin planting them, but I have found that it answers the purpose about as well. In place of taking off all the glass we have found by taking out every third run of lights that it does very well, shading the remainder heavily. This keeps the house much cooler than it would with all the glass in or all out. By no means trust the soil that has grown violets last year. Ours are planted in solid beds and we remove seven or eight inches of top soil because we believe the violet roots have gone down to a good depth, filling

Many growers run a wire along on the bed close by each row, and a corresponding wire well up along the plants and then run strings up, one for each stem. This is excellent if you can fix the top wire firmly and securely to prevent the string from sagging and getting loose, but if this cannot be readily done a very neat method is to run a single wire for each row about two feet above the bed, and then use wire stakes three, four or five feet long, according to variety and tie the same to the wire. Then you can run your plants up the stakes. While this is not nearly so handy when it comes time for cutting the flowers as if you use string, it is a far better method to use for varieties like Hurrell, that have a tendency to come away sideways after showing a bud. It is sometimes difficult if only string is used for a support to get the stem to start up again clean and straight, when by using a wire stake you can draw your stem into proper position without any trouble.

During the present intensely hot weather the plants should be sprayed over several times a day, or rather, I should say, spray over the entire house, roof, walls and paths and everywhere to keep down the temperature. You don't want to get your plants hard and stunted, which they are apt to do if you run the atmosphere too dry. You must keep your plants on the move from the day they are planted till they are in flower, then success is certain.

Keep the beds well watered and remember that the sides of the benches, which are necessarily exposed to the sun, dry out more quickly than the center, which is shaded by the foliage of the plants.

The surface of the beds should be stirred up with a scratcher once a week, care of course being exercised not to break off the young roots as they go reaching out into the new soil. Stirring up the soil will kill off the weed seeds that are germinating all the time and keep that nasty green scum from forming on the surface, which is a sure sign of a more or less stagnant, sour condition of the soil.

The caterpillars are unusually numerous this year, and in a bad season the best thing to do for them is to use paris green and poison them. Handpicking is far too slow when the caterpillars are around by the thousand, as they are this year. While it may not be possible to poison all of them, you can get rid of a great many that way and pick off by hand what are left behind.

One pest in particular that has been recently described and illustrated, the "greenhouse Leaf Tyer" (the "Great Leaf Annihilator" would be a better name for it) is particularly aggravating. Kill all the butterflies you see in the houses and particularly look out for this measly little rusty colored moth "Phlyctenia rubiginosa" profana. The lady bug is doing valiant work in keeping down the black fly. Always learn to distinguish friends from foes among the insects.

Plants that were planted outside or are standing outside in pots or boxes need lots of spraying. Always place where they will be convenient to the hose, then they are not so liable to be neglected.

to sow lawn grass seed in summer, believing that after the 1st of June you must stop until the latter part of August. That all depends on whether you have the use of the hose. On the Pan-American grounds last year grass seed was sown every day from the 1st of June through the hottest days of summer. It was simply a matter of sprinkling. It was sown thickly, I will admit, but that is of little consequence if you can obtain a satisfactory lawn, and this same seed sown in the hottest days of July is now a lawn of the finest quality. I mention this so that people who are anxious to sow may not be afraid to, providing they have the hose. If you have not it would be most unwise to attempt sowing until the end of August.

in again with a good, heavy loam that was plowed and prepared last year. We spread about two inches of well decayed manure on the bed and fork it in. Bone dust was added to the soil in the field a month ago, and we applied it at the rate of about a 5-inch pot to a barrow load of soil. We believe that violets like bone dust.

CHRYSANTHEMUM NOTES.

Plants that were got out on the benches in good season will now be growing away nicely, and this is the best time to put in your supports. If this is done while the plants are small it is not half so much work, and you don't run any chances of getting your stems crooked or your plants broken.

 PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION.

PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION.

We recently spent a few days at the Pan-American Exposition, Buffalo, and must say we were very agreeably surprised at its beauty and magnitude.

Of course, the buildings are not so large as those at the World's Fair in Chicago, but the Buffalo Exposition is a good deal more than a small edition of the World's Fair. Even more effort has been expended upon the ornamentation of its beautiful buildings, and the color scheme, which we feared would detract rather than add to the general beauty of the scene, has been so artistically handled that it is a pronounced success. It is truly a rainbow city and a dream of beauty.

The grounds lack a reposeful sound island, but it is difficult to conceive of anything more beautiful than the grand court at night with the magnificent display of electric lights on the buildings, that noble tower rising heavenward at the end with the opalescent water gushing from its base and the many-colored lights rising from the water in the central lagoon. Sitting in a comfortable seat at one end of the court on a perfect summer night listening to Sousa's music with the beautiful buildings and stately as a setting and the glittering tower of fire at the other end, we decided that never before had we seen any work of man so entrancingly beautiful. It is something that no one should miss who can possibly get to Buffalo this summer.

We present in this issue engravings from photographs of a few of the architectural features, including one of the tower at night, which though a good photographic reproduction naturally falls a great deal short of the reality. One of the greatest beauties of the tower, to our mind, is the waterfall at its base, upon which lights are directed in such a way as to make a continually changing color effect that is wonderfully soft and pleasing.

The display of florists' plants on the grounds is not only extensive but the plants are all in fine condition. We will not attempt to go into details as these are covered each week in Mr. Scott's notes and will only say that we were continually surprised by the shortness of time in which many apparently finished effects had been created. It shows what can be done with such a thorough and able gardener as Mr. William Scott in direct charge of the work.

In the Horticulture Building the display of plants is not as extensive as it should be, though good as far as it goes. The best feature in flowering plants at the time of our visit was a collection of pelargoniums by the Cottage Gardens, Queens, N. Y. There is an extensive display of fruits, especially apples, but that is out of our department. Several huge cocoa palms in fruit attract much attention, as do a lot of fruiting pine apples in the conservatory.

There are numerous restaurants on the grounds. We found the Wellington cafe the most satisfactory, the quality good, prices fair and service all that could be wished. We cannot say as much for the Bailey Catering Company, which has numerous restaurants in various parts of the grounds. In none did we get satisfactory treatment, and dried-up sandwiches and slops of coffee seem to be prominent features of their service, although good prices are charged. In Alt Nurnburg, the German Village, the quality was strictly first-class, but prices decidedly steep. If you want a first-class meal you can get it here, but you must be prepared to pay a dollar or more for your meal after paying a quarter to get in. For a lunch on the Midway Pabst's is all right, but when you want a square meal you will have to go to the Wellington or in the German Village.

We visited a few attractions on the Midway and found the Philippine Village decidedly the most interesting and enjoyable. It is all that its name implies and the show in the theater is good. The Hawaiian Village is not a village at all. There is simply a theater when you get in. But the show is a good one and well worth seeing. Darkest Africa was decidedly dark when we visited it one evening. Though the lights were aglow outside and the "barker" was using his lungs to the limit there was no light at all inside. When spoken to the manager said it wasn't his fault. But a man who will take your money when he knows he hasn't any light to enable patrons to see anything, is pretty apt to be running a fake. The Cairo street is all right and as bright and entertaining as the one at the World's Fair. The camels and donkeys and Egyptian girls and street fakirs are all there. The Indian Village is fairly interesting, but the show will be very flat and wearing to anyone who has seen Buffalo Bill's braves whoop things up. The infant incubator was very interesting, and the institution is exactly what it purports to be. There are other good attractions, and quite a few where there is more to be seen outside than inside, but their "barkers" help to swell the noise in the street and make things interesting.

One thing of which Buffalo may well be proud is its magnificent street car service. It is decidedly superior to that of any other city we have ever visited.

The Exposition crowds are handled most admirably and this adds greatly to the comfort and pleasure of visitors.

TREES.

I would like to ask through the REVIEW if our native pines can be replanted at this time of the year with safety?

Also if it would be all right to trim large maple and elm shade trees now?

W. E. H.

Premising that the trees are of ordinary commercial size and in fair condition they can be successfully transplanted by the use of the requisite skill and the necessary precautions, but the chances are largely against success in the hands of the average tree planter. It would be much safer to transplant in the early spring or late in the fall, preferably spring.

If it should be found absolutely necessary to transplant young pines as late as this a good plan is to mix a thin wash of blue clay and puddle the roots of the pines in it before planting.

In regard to trimming maple and elm shade trees, dead wood can, of course, be cut out at any time. Elms should never be trimmed if it can be avoided, and no deciduous tree should be cut while the bark is loose and full of sap, as injury is almost certain to result.

However, nature seems able to endure a wonderful amount of rough usage. Where soft maples are torn by storms in summer they appear to recover in a very short time.

JOHN HIGGINS.

CINERARIAS.

I have some cinerarias in two-inch pots in the greenhouse. They have from four to six leaves. Now, when I report them shall I put them outside under shelter or keep them in the greenhouse a little longer? Is tobacco the best preventive of insects? I shall be very thankful to you for an answer in the FLORISTS' REVIEW and for notes on the general culture of the plant.

L. A. G.

In answer to the above would say that the very best place for cinerarias after they are shifted would be a cold frame; say a frame about one foot or fifteen inches deep. The sashes should be shaded and then raised both back and front so that a current of air is passing over the plants. In this position they will be cooler than any place you can put them. On fine nights when there is no danger of a storm if not too much labor the sashes could be removed. Plunge the pots in leaf mold, tan bark or spent hops during the summer. The green fly can be kept down by placing plenty of tobacco stems on the surface among the pots.

The cineraria is almost too difficult a plant to grow well for the value there is in it. Its chief point of culture is that it wants at all times the very coolest house you can give it without actual frost. Forty degrees at night in winter is sufficient at any rate. In flowering time it wants the fullest light without the midsummer sun. It wants rather a strong loam with one-fourth of some rotten manure, by no means sandy, and firmly potted. It never wants to be over watered. You can kill them easier by an overdose of water than any plant I know of. At the same time if allowed to get very dry they will wilt and lose their bottom leaves. The next important thing is to keep away green fly. They are not much troubled in a frame in the summer, but as soon as removed to the house in the fall constant and steady fumigation is needed.

These are the principal points in cultivating the cineraria, which if well grown is a very fine decorative plant, but when poorly grown is an abomination and I have come to the conclusion for several years past that there is no money in it for the commercial florist.

WM. SCOTT.

FERTILIZERS FOR ROSES.

Will Mr. Scott or some other gentleman tell me through the FLORISTS' REVIEW the best commercial fertilizer to produce the best blooms on roses planted out in the Sunny South. I might say the soil is almost all sand. It has been fertilized with horse manure, which does not seem to give good results. Kindly name quantity to be used on two-year-old roses.

FLORIDA.

"Florida" does not state what class of roses he is cultivating. Neither am I positive whether they are out of doors or under glass, but as he is in Florida it is to be reasonably supposed they are planted out in the garden.

Without going into a long chapter on roses I would say that the best commercial fertilizer for roses and many other plants is pure bone dust, which can be forked into the soil in the spring. For a sandy soil the best manure would be that from the cow stable.

The tea and noisette classes do very well in sandy soil if it is not worn out, but the hybrid perpetuals, the most important class with us for garden culture, do much better and produce the finest flowers in a heavy loam. There is nothing equal to a fresh soil for all roses. A garden that has been cultivated for years, no matter how much manure and fertilizer has been applied, is not equal to a sod from land that has been a pasture for years. Never has this been better illustrated than on the grounds of the Pan-American Exposition this spring. The top four inches of a clay farm which was all meadow was mixed with about a fourth of cow manure, and it has grown roses such as I have not seen since childhood's days, and perhaps I have an exaggerated opinion of those because "Distance lends enchantment to the view."

WM. SCOTT.

BOSTON.

Trade Conditions.

The last week of June, and indeed the last week of the season, was a peculiar one in some respects. Weddings and school exercises made considerable of a floral movement, but all necessary material was easily and cheaply supplied by the different wholesale establishments. The revival of the old idea of the presentation of school bouquets by the city of Boston also called unexpectedly for the material for about 4,000 of them without causing a ripple.

During the first part of the week an enormous supply of outdoor Jacks came in, many of them being very fine ones. But the supply diminished very quickly, leaving but few of any value toward the end of the week. American Beauties, Meteors and Liberties are coming steadily and in plenty, as well as pink and white ones; Kaiserins coming freely to cover the fact that Brides are not now very good. Neither are Bridesmaids very good as a general thing, and there is no accommodating blossom stepping up to take its place if such a thing were needed. If so, perhaps more of the growers would try Mr. F. W. Fletcher's experiment with the Maman Cochet. He is cutting quite a few good ones from the small amount of glass utilized. There are now but few real good pinks, but there are enough of the poorer grades.

Sweet peas are getting very plentiful and prices upon them have gone down materially during the past few days. They were about the only thing in the business upon which the figure could be reduced, too.

Meeting a schoolmaster friend a few days ago, he remarked that after graduation exercises he would be "on the loose pulley!" This is a pretty good expression and will probably apply to the floral situation for the next two or three months very aptly: just going, but not doing anything.

How has the closing season used you? My private opinion is that there has been more money made than during any past season for six or eight years, both by growers and retailers, but it has not been distributed so evenly, the most of the gain being in comparatively few hands. But of course this is debatable. I am afraid this is particularly true about our friends, the earthen growers, since their wares have averaged poorly for the season, haven't they? Their plants seemed never to get over the effects of the hot autumn until "everlastingly too late."

J. S. MANTER.

PITTSBURG.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' and Gardeners' Club held a special meeting Thursday, June 27, to consider the effect of our flower show of the week before and settle all matters connected with its business details. Everyone was delighted with the show and it was unanimously pronounced a decided success. Then every bill and incidental expense in connection with it was presented and paid and we still have money in the treasury.

Something was said about a chrysanthemum show in the fall, but in view of the big exhibitions of those flowers gotten up by the Allegheny and Pittsburg parks and the private conservatories, and that October and November are very busy months the autumn show was not pressed.

A Picnic.

But the boys were feeling in a very good humor and as Fred Burki hadn't been seen in at the rose show—he sent lots of splendid flowers there, though—he is so busy building and fixing up his new place at Bakerstown, it was decided to have a picnic out there at Fred's place, and together with our wives and our sweethearts, and our sisters and our cousins and our aunts, we are going to Bakerstown on July the 16th.

Business.

The Fourth of July is right here and we never knew it in our lives to come so quickly. Business has kept up later than we have ever known it, and I believe the cut flower people would say the same thing. The Buffalo man who says the Pan-American is not doing him any good is away off. So many visitors can't come to this town and leave money without its being a benefit to all the community, directly or indirectly. Many of the state buildings have spent money with our florists in decorating their grounds, filling vases, etc., and on the occasion of the dedication of their buildings flowers are in demand, so I believe business all round will be considered good.

A little more than a month now before the convention will be here, and from all reports it is going to be a whopper. The weather for the past ten days has been so fearfully hot that it has told at last on flowers. Carnations are getting small and feeble and roses of good quality are difficult to get. Sweet peas are coming in freely.

Visitors.

All the florists are not waiting for the convention to visit the Pan-American.

and some may have been here that I have not had the pleasure of seeing. We met Wm. F. Henning of Detroit, Charles Feast of Baltimore, Anton Then and wife of Chicago. Mr. J. R. Fotheringham of Tarrytown has been here for a few days and F. R. Pierson is to arrive tomorrow. H. H. Groff of Simcoe has been here again and highly approves of the Pan-American. Mr. Groff is going to make a magnificent show of gladiolus here in August. He is an amateur and an enthusiast, and that beats the professional every time. Mr. W. A. Manda spent Sunday here, and last, but not least (at any rate physically), is another visit of Harry Baisley of Detroit. It takes Harry some time to do up Buffalo, and I have no doubt it pays him for every minute of time he spends.

Pan-American Notes.

With the exception of placing a finer grade of gravel on the surface of a few of the roads, which is now being done, we can say that the Pan-American is practically finished, and I have no doubt that a sigh of relief goes up from the director-general and all other responsible officials, for it has been a mighty task. Last Thursday the attendance reached 51,500, and today, Dominion day, there is another large crowd. These numbers I believe compare favorably with the World's Fair, which about this time was averaging between 50,000 and 75,000, and they had a city of a million and a half to draw from.

The occasional heavy showers have helped the appearance of everything outside. We have received a very fine collection of fancy caladiums from Peter Henderson & Co., which were placed in the South Conservatory. In my last notes your report made the exhibit of F. R. Pierson read, "400 Cannas." That would not have been a very large exhibit. It should read 4,000. There are upward of 400 of some one variety.

With very favorable weather and the soil so snitable to the hardy roses they seem now to be sending up a second crop immediately, which is very encouraging, and beds which we thought we would have to dispose of after the first crop promise to be brilliant for some time. Just at the present moment a bed of Crimson Ramblers covering an area of 1,500 square feet is a brilliant sight. At a rough estimate there is about 300,000 buds and blooms. They will be in perfection on the Fourth of July, an appropriate day for such a blaze of color. Henry A. Dreer has planted three large beds of tuberous rooted begonias. These are not considered satisfactory out of doors but we have seen them make as brilliant a show in Buffalo as geraniums, and with careful cultivation we believe they will again. The same firm has also planted several very large beds of dahlias. W. E. Hall of Clyde, Ohio, has sent 400 "Little Pink" geraniums. Mr. C. D. Zimmerman of our city has planted a very fine tropical bed.

I am not sure that I mentioned that we have two Century Plants, or, more correctly, Agave Americana, which are sending up enormous flower stems and will, I expect, be in bloom the latter part of July. I find very few people have ever seen these gigantic succulents bloom. The writer saw a pair of them bloom many years ago. We expect the flower stem to reach twenty feet. Some years ago one or two of these plants flowered in the city of Rochester and they were considered such a sight that excursion trains were actually run from Buffalo and other cities to see them, but visitors to the Pan-American will have the opportunity to see them with many other sights. W. S.

A FLORAL SADDLE.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph of a floral saddle arranged by Walter Kreitling & Co., Chicago, for the recent Derby day in that city. It was placed on the winning horse at the conclusion of the great race.

As the florist has frequent calls for designs of this character during the racing season we believe the picture will be of general interest to our readers.

Market Conditions.

The weather is so oppressively hot just now that the public is looking for cooler places than the florist's store. The early part of the past week was fairly active considering the season.

The growers are very busy just now. Some are rebuilding, others are painting and replanting. This work has been going on for a few weeks past. At some of the places the young stock looks very fine.

It is rather difficult to give a report of the market for the past week. Select roses are not to be had. There are supplies of poor grades in the market, and all they bring is from $1 to $3 per 100, and among these there are plenty of bullheaded Meteors and mildewed Brides and Maids; the only good-looking rose in the market is the Kaiserin. White carnations are in good demand, as there is quite a lot of funeral work. The best of these bring $1 per 100, but the bulk of them go for 50 and 75 cents. Sweet peas, which were a glut all of last week, are now out of the market. All outdoor stuff is looking bad, and if we don't have a good rain soon there will be none in the market. Smilax is holding out well with quite a demand.

Notes.

Fred Ammann, of Edwardsville, and E. W. Guy, of Belleville, were in town the past week buying supplies.

R. J. Mohr left last Saturday for Omaha to spend a two weeks' vacation at his home.

The July meeting of the Florists' Club will be a lively one. There are quite a number of candidates for president. A lot of other important matters will come up for discussion, and it is hoped that every member will be present. The annual outing will take place a week later, and the trustees have about completed arrangements. The date of the meeting is July 11, at 3 p. m., and that of the outing is July 18, at 9 a. m. in Preister's Park, near Belleville.

Bowling.

The June series of the St. Louis Florists' Bowling Club ended last Monday night. Eighteen games were rolled, and A. Y. Ellison comes in first with an average of 175 in eleven games; Kuehn, second with 165; Bencke third with 152. No 200 scores were made, and the highest single score was by Bencke, 181. Ellison was second with 153 and Kunz, third with 152. The score of all the members who took part during the series are as follows:—

A VALUABLE ASSISTANT.

I find the REVIEW a valuable assistant and an excellent advertising medium.—JOHN NORRIS, Florist for JEWELL NURSERY Co., Lake City, Minn.

ty of young people on a hay ride last Friday evening, which was given by his daughter, Miss Laura Sanders. Seventeen young people made up the party.

Charlie Kuehn is making extensive alterations at his place. He is moving the wire shop to the third floor and will use the entire first floor for cut flowers and supplies. Charlie is afraid the work is too great and may keep him from attending the convention.

The bad wreck on the Wabash at Cass Station, Ind., last Wednesday caused quite a disappointment among the dealers. The shipments of flowers did not come in until the next morning, and, of course, were only fit for the dump pile.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Transportation to Buffalo.

The Trunk Line Association has made the usual rate of a round trip for one and one-third single fare on the certificate plan, as in the past. The roads outside of the Trunk Line territory have not yet announced a rate but will undoubtedly co-operate on the same basis.

It was hoped that rates to the public for the Pan-American Exposition would be made so low as to make the use of certificates unnecessary this year, and for this reason acceptance of the one and one-third rate has been delayed until the present time; but it is now definitely settled that the above-mentioned rate is lower than anything that members of the society are likely to enjoy otherwise.

A special concession, however, has been made by the Trunk Line Association whereby members of the S. A. F., by depositing their certificate with the joint agent at the exposition on or before Aug. 14 and paying the sum of $1 may obtain an extension of their return tickets to Aug. 24.

WM. J. STEWART, Sec'y.

EVERGREENS AT PAN-AMERICAN.

We present herewith an engraving from a photograph of the exhibit of evergreens and bay trees by Messrs. Bobbink & Atkins, Rutherford, N. J., at the Pan-American Exposition. It was impossible to get the whole of the exhibit into one view, as many fine specimen box and bays extend along the lawn. All except the sweet bays are planted out, and up to date not a plant has been lost. The exhibit consists of standard and pyramid sweet bays, a large number of finely trimmed box, taxus, blue spruce and a large assortment of the choicest evergreens. The collection arrived at the exposition about the 15th of May and occupied an entire car. The weather has been very favorable, but it is certainly unusual that in handling so many evergreens not one should have been lost.

In the background at the right is seen the Elmwood entrance, where the greatest number of people enter the grounds. The building upon which the flag is flying is the New York State Building, a handsome marble structure which will remain after the exposition is closed.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The supply of roses seems to have shortened still further, and the quality to have dropped a few pegs more. Good teas bring $4 but there are mighty few of them and for the other kind the price grades down to zero. There are quite a few good carnations, but the demand is light. Though sales at $1.50 are reported others say that $1 is about the top and the sales at prices below that figure are much more numerous than those at above it. We hear of clean-up sales at 3 cents a bunch of 25.

Some good peonies are yet to be had from cold storage stock. Sweet peas are coming in by the cartload. Of the good ones about half find buyers but it seems impossible to move the others at any price. We hear of clean-up sales at as low as 1 cent a bunch. A few good whites still bring 25 cents a hundred.

Reviewing the season as a whole the dealers say it has been satisfactory from their standpoint but that the growers' returns for a given amount of stock have averaged about 15 per cent less than last year, which has been hard on the growers. The great increase in production is evidently making itself felt. At the same time good stock, put on the market in good shape, has nearly always brought good figures.

Various Items.

The date for the Florists' Club's picnic has been changed to Wednesday, July 24, owing to the fact that Tuesday is required by the bowling contingent for their games.

The leading retailers have agreed to close their places of business at 6 p. m., on Saturdays at 8 p. m., and at noon Sunday during July and August.

There has not yet been any agreement made by the wholesalers, but all will probably close at 5 p. m. on week days and at noon Sunday, beginning July 5.

Mr. Arnold Ringier, representing W. W. Barnard & Co., sailed from New York June 27 on a business trip to Europe. While there he will visit his old home in Switzerland. Mr. R. R. McGill, also with the above firm, has returned from his summer vacation of two weeks, which he spent at his old home in Iowa.

Mr. James Hartshorne is now sole manager of the Chicago Carnation Company, of Joliet, Mr. J. D. Thompson's connection with the company having been severed July 1.

The Fleischman Floral Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000. The incorporators are Ben F. Rubel, W. Kasper, Jr., and J. A. Irrman.

John Bohan has gone to Salt Lake City to take a position with the Salt Lake City Floral Company.

Alex. Newitt is now foreman for Jos. Labo, Joliet, Ill.

The rose garden on the wooded island in Jackson Park has been making its annual display of bloom, and the roses have been of excellent quality.

A. H. Budlong is camping out in Wisconsin. J. A. Budlong is as strongly addicted to the bicycle as ever, and averages 6,000 miles a year. He broke his collar bone on a trip last May, but is now in as good trim as ever.

There was a quick lift of quotations and other things at McKellar & Winter-son's last Tuesday as the result of a call by a fire cracker about a foot in length. It exploded right under Mr. Winter-son's feet, and that rising young man is still rising.

X. Wietor is back from another fishing trip, this time to Tomahawk Lake, Wis.

The retailers say it has been the poorest June in years.

The stretch of torrid weather was broken by heavy rain storms Monday and Tuesday of this week, and while it is still very warm it is more endurable. Working under glass was positively dangerous last week.

Bowling.

The ninth series of league games last Tuesday evening developed a warm contest between the Wholesalers and the Retailers. Of the three games the Wholesalers took two and the Retailers one. The Growers received a gift of three games from the Seaman. F. Stollery picked up one of those dollar prizes with a score of 208. Following are the scores:

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The most noticeable change in the cut flower market this week is in the personnel of the sellers. The commission men are with us still and the growers who are important factors in our winter business come in town with flowers but rarely or do not come at all. Better so, for there is not near enough business to use up all the stock that comes in as it is. There are a few nice flowers coming in and a great many fair ones. Sometimes they are wanted, generally they are not. Prices are low. That is all there is to say.

Various Items.

John C. Cracey has gotten up a paper with the object of securing early closing among the uptown stores during July and August. The hours set for closing are 6 p. m. on two days, 8 p. m. on two other days, with the last two days, Friday and Saturday, left open. This paper has been signed by nearly all the stores in the northwestern section of the city. It is a good move and should be taken up elsewhere, both in this and in other cities. The store men ought to have a lot up in summer when there is often little to do.

Samuel S. Pennock has been commenting favorably on the excellence of some of the stock sent in so late in the season. After naming one or two growers whose names are household words among us he added that they were not the only ones. By this our leading commission merchant was understood to mean that his kinsfolk were keeping up their reputations. Lansdowne produces good roses even in summer, especially Meteor has done well there in past seasons.

Charles E. Mowlan has quite a good stock of Maman Cochét rose which he is trying for the first time for summer cutting. The plants have made strong growth and promise well. Bride and Maid have done well here but La France is not considered satisfactory as a winter bloomer. Smilax is grown to some extent and asparagus more largely.

The Florists' Club of this city will have a bouquet during convention week at the Armstrong apartment house at the corner of Mohawk and Delaware avenues, Buffalo, N. Y., and they may mess in detachments at nearby restaurants of reputed excellence. The rate at the Armstrong is $1 to $1.50 a day for each person where two persons occupy one room. Presumably the rate is higher where a single room is desired or for special rooms. Notices have been sent to all members with blanks to be filled up and returned to G. C. Watson, 211 South Juniper street, this city, before July 15. This will enable the hotel committee to secure the rooms required at the Armstrong in good time.

It is an interesting fact that the industries that most closely affect our own, namely, glass and coal, are now in the hands of trusts. Glass has been advanced until today certain popular sizes cost two and one-half times as much as they did five years ago. And with the glass factories idle to keep up prices there is no relief in sight. The increase in the price of coal is not so marked. The small sizes will be higher than last year, while the large sizes are to be steadily pushed up each month until September, when high water mark slightly below last winter's strike scare price will be reached.

Should these two great trusts succeed in carrying out their plans it will be necessary for us to look sharp or our stock will cost us more to produce than we will get for it. Personally, I believe the demand will be so good as to justify higher prices next season than last season, good as they then were, and that will at least offset the advance in the cost of the articles we consume. This is, however, an uncertainty against almost a certainty, and it will be well for us all to use judgment in making plans for the winter.

The rose growers who have used shading cloth on their houses while cleaning and filling have a decided advantage over their brethren, who think such an aid a sign of degeneracy. The work is done much more quickly and thoroughly with the cloth than without it at a small outlay. It was once thought that only "Willies" carried umbrellas; now it's the same with shading cloth; you will all come around in time.

If these notes are not chery enough or don't interest you, pray remember that the thermometer was 100 degrees Fahrenheit in the shade on the day of the evening that they were penned and that the writers did not divide their time between the palm leaf fan and the water cooler but were in and about the houses where it was not quite so cool as above temperature.

Club Meeting.

The attendance at the meeting of the Florists' Club last Tuesday evening was not large but the meeting was an animated one. John Westcott, chairman of the transportation committee, anticipates a rate of one fare ($9.25) for the round trip to Buffalo by the Pennsylvania railroad. Over 100 are expected to start from here for the convention city on Monday, Aug. 5. The bowling enthusiasm is strong and the other teams had better figure on strong work by the aggregation from this city.

PHIL.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

The long spell of drought is still unbroken and the high temperature which has prevailed all through June is causing considerable alarm here. We have had but one good rain in two months, and that was accompanied by a destructive hail storm which riddled the houses of a few of our florists south of the city. The loss is felt quite seriously by some owing to their limited amount of capital and the present high price of glass.

Truly the growers have had a most trying season to contend with. Even with the liberal use of the hose outside stock is barely kept alive, and it shows no signs of either growth or bloom. Our lawns are so badly parched that the use of the mower has been unnecessary so far this summer, and shrubbery which bloomed so profusely a year ago has suffered accordingly.

The volume of business done in June was very satisfactory and fully equal to the same month a year ago. Funeral work was much in demand last week, and everything in the shape of a white flower was put to good use. Roses and carnations are all stem and foliage, the blooms being so small and poor it requires the use of a powerful lens to see them. The only outdoor flower of any account is the hollyhock, and owing to the extreme scarcity of other stock this flower has advanced to the front ranks.

The Chicago commission houses are sending some good material to this market. Arthur Newell received an assortment last Saturday among which was a hundred paeonies. These Arthur tells us had been in cold storage, and they certainly were fine, perfect flowers and far superior to those grown here this season.

Baker Bros., two thrifty youths, have departed for the Klondyke, where they hold important claims. They had been engaged in the florist business over twenty years and owned a neat range of houses and a valuable tract of land. The greenhouses have been leased to Sam Short, who will grow general stock for his model store in Kansas City, Kan.

STYLES OF BUILDING.

I notice some of the builders advocate higher gutters and less pitch to the roofs of the houses. As this upsets all my ideas of building I would like to advance a few reasons why I think the house with nearly a half pitch is better than a flatter one.

The more glass the more light and less area to heat. Butted glass can be used successfully when a house has a proper pitch, and there is certainly less wind resistance in a house with butted glass than in one with lapped glass.

I would like to hear from experienced growers and hope the matter will be discussed at some length, for it seems to me that to grow stock successfully the houses must be the first point to consider.

SHIPPING PLANTS.

I want to sound a long, loud "Amen!" to the article on "Shipping Plants" written by "Boxes" in the Review of June 20. There are other grievances which should be aired in the interest of all concerned. For instance, after paying heavy express charges we sometimes receive a letter from shipper stating that "We are out of some of the plants ordered and have sent you so and so," and this without so much as "by your leave."

CINCINNATI.

Various Notes.

The awfully hot weather still continues, the thermometer rising each day almost to the 100 mark, and at present there is no sign of a break in the hot spell.

Of course, flowers have dwindled to almost nothing in size and with the exception of feverfew and candytuft, etc., are very scarce. White carnations are in good demand and readily bring $1.50 per 100, with scarcely half enough to fill orders. Roses, with the exception of Meteors, are very poor and go for 2 to 3 cents. The Meteors are good and sell from 2 to 5 cents. Business as a rule is good considering the hot weather and shipping trade still holds up in good style, especially for white flowers. Nearly all of the retail business is funeral work, so white flowers are most in demand.

The new eastern ferns are now in this market and are fine. They bring $1.50 per 1,000.

The boys are beginning to talk Buffalo a little now, and as the date of the S. A. F. O. H. convention draws near and interest grows I think that quite a number of the craft will make up their minds to take a week off and go. The chance to go to the convention and to take in the exposition at the same time is a big inducement and hard to resist.

Preparations for the florists' annual outing are rapidly nearing completion. It is to be hoped that July 18, on which date the picnic will occur, will be a better day than the picnic day last year, when it rained all day.

The residence of R. A. Betz was visited by a thief early Monday morning and several articles of value were taken. As yet the thief has not been caught. This is the second time within a few weeks that Mr. Betz has been robbed.

Park Superintendent B. P. Critchell has returned from Milwaukee, where he attended the meeting of park superintendents. C. J. OLMER.

ST. JOSEPH, MO.

Mr. J. N. Kidd has disposed of his plant business and will hereafter devote all his attention to his store business. He will handle stock from some of the large western growers.

Cut flower trade keeps up well considering the extremely hot and dry weather we are having. Out-door stock is smaller than when planted eight weeks ago. The mercury has stood at 98 to 103 degrees during the middle of the day for a week. Roses and carnations are small and mixed stuff scarce.

JOLIET, ILL.

Mr. James Hartshorne is now sole manager of the Chicago Carnation Co. Mr. J. D. Thompson's connection with the company having been severed July 1.

Mr. Thompson is endeavoring to organize a company to build and conduct another carnation growing establishment.

WACO, TEX.—The Texas State Floral Society has issued the premium list for its annual exhibition, which will be held in this city Nov. 12 to 16 next. Mr. Henry Nanz, Louisville, Ky., has been selected to act as judge at the exhibition.

ARMORED SCALES.

A subscriber recently sent us a leaf of latania palm infested with small black scales that were not oval but were more the shape of a minute black worm flattened against the leaf. They were about an eighth of an inch long and there was quite a colony of them.

We learn from Prof. John B. Smith, entomologist of the Experiment Station at New Brunswick, N. J., that they are known as Armored Scales, and he recommends persistent spraying with tobacco decoction at weekly intervals for at least a month, the mixture to be as strong as the plants will stand. A dilution of the tobacco extracts on the market or a solution of the tobacco soaps will answer.

Prof. L. O. Howard, Government Entomologist, Washington, says the scales are tropical species, found at the north only upon greenhouse plants, and recommends the kerosene emulsion wash as the best remedy.

KILLING MEALY BUG.

For killing aphid and mealy bug on plants nothing is equal to bi-sulphid of carbon. Put the plants in a light box, close up, put some of the carbon in a dish or merely set in the open tub. It beats all other remedies that I have ever tried.
J. B. RAPP.

PAR EXCELLENCE.

WELL PLEASED.

VICTORIA, B. C.—Twenty-six botanical students of Minnesota University sailed from here June 20 for a month's stay at the botanical station at Port Renfrew.

THE twelfth annual report of the Missouri Botanical Garden, St. Louis, has been issued. The scientific papers include, "A disease of the black locust," "Crotoms of the United States" (very freely illustrated), and "Garden beans cultivated as esculents" (very comprehensive and freely illustrated). It is a handsome and valuable volume and does credit to the garden and to Director Wm. Trelease.

BUFFALO HOTELS.

No special rates will be made by the Buffalo hotels for convention week except to large parties. Below will be found a list of the leading hotels with the rates per day for rooms on the European plan. The rate given is for the cheapest rooms and there will be no limit to the "up" if the crowds are large and the demand for rooms brisk. But the Buffalo Florists' Club has a long list of other hotels, apartment houses, private houses, etc., from which they can supply accommodations for every one and at any price desired.

Write to the chairman of the hotel committee, W. A. Adams, 479 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y., telling him just what sort of accommodations you wish and at what price and he will see that you get it:

PARKERSBURG, W. VA.—A Ludike, formerly gardener for Mrs. R. C. Kerens, Elkins, W. Va., is now with Mr. G. A. Hieble, the florist of this city.

WEST CHESTER, PA.—The eighth annual flower show was held here June 8 and drew a large attendance. J. L. Maul, of Whitford, acted as judge.

HOLYOKE, MASS.—The annual rose show of the Horticultural Society was held June 19. The admission fee was 10 cents for adults and 5 cents for children.

SOUTH FRAMINGHAM, MASS.—John Butterworth has purchased the C. J. Power greenhouses, which he had leased for some years.

TERRE HAUTE, IND.—A hailstorm recently broke a good deal of glass in the houses of the M. A. Hunt Floral Company.

DOVER, N. H.—W. H. Elliott, of Brighton, Mass., has purchased land here upon which he will build an extensive greenhouse establishment in the fall.

HARTFORD, CONN.—The Florists' Club held its last meeting at Elizabeth Park and the members were liberally entertained by Superintendent Theo. Wirth. Several hours were spent viewing the beds of roses, which contain about fifty varieties and which were at their best.

He was thrown against an iron lamp post with such force that the post was broken into several pieces. Mr. Murphy was taken to the hospital. He is about 40 years old.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

Death of H. P. Buckley.

Henry P. Buckley, the florist, died June 24 of a complication of diseases after a protracted illness, aged 50 years.

Mr. Buckley was a resident of this city since 1872, and was always a respected and law-abiding citizen, having many friends. The news of his demise while not unexpected, will be received with sincere regret. Six months ago he suffered a stroke of paralysis, but until a month ago he was not in a critical condition.

He was a son of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob T. Buckley, and was born May 26, 1851, at Shopier, Wis. He was reared at that city and graduated from the local schools. In 1872 he came to this city, which has since been his home. Shortly after arriving here he engaged in the flour and feed business, the firm being known as H. P. Buckley & Co. He remained in that business until 1883, when he embarked in the floral business for himself. He was eminently successful in this latter business.

May 9, 1870, he was united in marriage with Miss Ella G. Conkling, daughter of William J. Conkling, of this city. He is survived by his widow, four sons, William T., Harry M., Edgar H., Ralph and C. Buckley; and three daughters, Alice M., Jeanette J., and Helen G. Buckley, all living at home.

The funeral was held June 26, three of his sons acting as pall bearers, and the remains were interred in Oak Ridge Cemetery.

Mr. Buckley, who was proprietor and manager of the South Side Floral Company, was on account of ill health forced to abandon his business Feb. 15 last, selling it to his eldest son, who has since then conducted it as the W. T. Buckley Plant Company.

GERANIUMS COMING BLIND.

In your issue of June 20, 1901, D. H. C. complains of trouble with geraniums coming blind. In my experience this happens when the stock is kept cool and wet in rather dark houses. Don't think he will have any trouble if he will run his houses a little warmer and drier. Geraniums will carry over and grow in a rather low temperature, even as low as 40 to 45 degrees, but 55 and 60 degrees will give much better results.

THOS. H. WHITE.

RANTOUL, ILL.—A very destructive hail storm did an immense amount of damage here June 20. H. M. Morris estimates the damage to his greenhouses, fruits and vegetables at $1,000. Many of the hailstones or chunks of ice were two inches long and an inch thick. A great many windows were broken and the damage to crops was serious. The total loss due to the storm is estimated at $25,000 to $30,000 in this vicinity.

WE HAVE received from Messrs. H. H. Berger & Co., 47 Barclay street, New York, a copy of their new trade price list. It contains 16 pages and cover, is freely illustrated and presents in a very attractive way the extensive line of bulbs, plants and seeds they offer to the trade. Any one in the trade who has not received a copy can no doubt obtain one free by addressing the firm as above.

INDEX TO ADVERTISERS.

This index covers only those having displayed advertisements. There is a host of others making indexes in our classified ads, and they will be found there under their proper headings.

Table listing advertisers and their page numbers, including American Rose Co., Jennings Bros., Easting, W. F., Kellogg, Geo. M., etc.

A KINDERGARTEN.

Mr. George Hansen, Berkeley, Cal., the landscape gardener, has written a very interesting little book on "Kindergartens" and has favored us with a copy. It is very entertainingly written and is illustrated with a number of engravings. The price is 75 cents, and it should certainly be worth the amount to any one interested in the subject.

Mr. Hansen has reduced the price of his work on orchid hybrids to $1.50.

Awarded the only first-class certificate of merit by the Society of American Florists, at Boston, Mass., Aug. 21, 1890, for Standard Flower Pots.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Old Sol is getting in his work in torrid style, 100 degrees in the shade being attained. Men are wheeling dirt and planting mums in houses where the temperature registers 120 degrees. Every few days we are treated to a furious rain and thunderstorm.

June weddings have been a boon to the florists. Being an almost daily occurrence they have consumed an enormous quantity of stock that would otherwise have gone to waste. While the hot weather has affected trade, funeral orders keep all pretty busy.

Mum, violet and rose planting are in full swing. The carnations are getting small, and if Brides and Maids continue decreasing a microscope will soon be required to see them.

July 2 there was an auction sale of the stock and fixtures of T. R. Kenwick & Co. The greenhouses, five in number, will be sold in a few days. The glass, single strength, 12x14, is the only value in the houses and will probably be sold for a mere song. The ten acres of property will also be sold, all by order of the court. G. F. C.

RALEIGH, N. C.

There was a heavy hailstorm here the night of June 23, some of the hailstones being as large as eggs. J. L. O'Quinn & Co. lost a lot of glass. A very heavy rainfall followed the hail.

O'Quinn & Co. have erected a new palm house of unique style. It is 16x40 feet, the side and ends 5 feet high, screened with galvanized wire window screening. The roof is tongue and grooved yellow pine with ten long narrow skylights set in toward the top. The sides are arranged so heavy canvas curtains can be put on in cold weather, at which time the palms will be removed and the house turned into a cold storage house for hardy plants.

THANKS FOR RESULTS.

Many thanks for results from adv. Had to turn down many orders. Sold out so clean could supply only about one-half that the orders called for.—J. N. KIDD, St. Joseph, Mo.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

Wearing Flowers.

The conventions of society have made it possible that to some extent we can tell what the "correct" ways of wearing flowers are. Women mostly are the wearers, and why should they not have definite ideas how flowers should be worn since they have become indispensable at many formal society events. Styles are followed to some extent in the make-up of the bride's as well as the bridesmaid's gowns, hair is dressed in this way or that, jewels may be in or out of fashion, so we do not find it remarkable to find decided likes and dislikes as regard the bouquet which is to assist the wearer to be graceful and attractive. We find, therefore, that at such an exacting function as a wedding, where the minutest details have been thought out with the utmost care, the flowers also receive their share of consideration. The florist must now produce an arrangement of flowers which will compare favorably in taste and elegance of finish to the delicateness of the bride's appearance.

Flowers worn at such occasions should not be made too prominent a feature, as we find is too often the case. They should become supplementary to the appearance of the whole, and instead of looking showy, should add to the effect of finish and beauty. Large, heavy, sweeping bride's bouquets are no longer tolerated and the florist who can produce a graceful bouquet without the use of balls of twine and unnecessary quantities of ferns and superfluous foliage is responding to the present requirements of exacting patrons. These bouquets approach nearer the old style opera shaped bouquet and in no way stand related to the heavy garland of flowers often called bride's bouquets. They are made so that the flowers fall gracefully forward when carried. The wearer carries the bouquet in both hands and allows the arms to assume a graceful position before the body. Oddness or eccentricity in the make up of a bride's bouquet is not in good taste.

The bridesmaids' bouquets offer a larger field for originality. They are usually made to appear jaunty and sketchy so as to stand in contrast to the reposeful bride's bouquet. The flowers chosen usually have delicate color and the way that they are worn is determined largely by the way the bouquets are made. They may be worn as the bride carries her flowers, or if the flowers are of a loose arrangement, as they generally are, they then may be gracefully laid over the arm. A very striking effect was produced at a recent wedding by using German willow baskets filled with swainsona and tied with ribbons, allowing for one loop by which they were carried suspended from the arm. In whatever way the bouquet may be made up, the best way of carrying it is the one which most nearly approaches the natural one. All bouquets should have the handles wound with ribbon, and roses should have all thorns removed so as to prevent any discomfort to the wearer. The maid of honor's bouquet is generally made similar to the bride's bouquet but of a different kind of flower.

The main idea from what has been said is that the florist cannot be too careful or too artistic in preparing a bouquet to be carried by a stunning bride. She must accept at the last minute whatever the florist sends to her, for she has not the opportunity of having a single "refitting" such as her tailor would offer her. Even if she does not have many moments for reflection, her many critical admirers will, and they will be quick to appreciate a florist's best endeavors.

The wearing of flowers in general is again receiving more attention of late. The nosegay is always appreciated and flowers itself but also to the fact that a bunch of violets is easily pinned on, and it appears well on a tailor-made suit. If a new idea could be introduced which would bring to the front some compact and fragrant bunch of flowers such as the English wall flower, for example, it would no doubt become quite popular owing to the constant demand to have something new. The popular summer flower for wear is the sweet pea. Its gracefulness and delicate shadings make it just as attractive in summer as is the violet in winter. Both are appropriate and distinct for the seasons in which they grow.

Flowers are worn to quite an extent at dinner parties. The ladies wear a few loose flowers or quite commonly specially prepared bouquets are made. The flowers used may be of the same kind as used in the table decorations or they may so be chosen that they will bring out a pleasant contrast. These flowers may serve a double purpose for they may be worn at the theater party which usually follows a dinner. The gentlemen usually wear some neat boutonniere made of white flowers. The ladies in wearing the flowers are guided largely where to place them by the style of gown that they wear. The quaint custom of a number of the fact that flowers are to be had so cheaply on the streets has added to the number of those who use them. A purchase on the street may lead to a more critical taste and the store man must be in a position to offer neat combinations which will satisfy these new lovers of flowers. For street wear the violet has been the most popular flower. This has been not alone due to the merits of the years back of presenting the dinner guests with floral favors, has as yet not been revived. Each guest found at her place a small basket of gracefully arranged flowers which was elaborated with ribbons and so arranged that on leaving the table she might allow the basket to hang from her arm by the loop in the ribbon. Now that we are in a time that old-fashioned customs are being revived, this one might possibly be received favorably.

This season flowers have been worn quite freely in the hair. This seems to be a natural outcome after the great variety of egrets which have been worn of late. The custom is a pretty one and if not overdone will even become more popular next season. Some women have taken pleasure in wearing the same kind of flower throughout the season, and in some cases have become identified as always wearing this or that flower. Artificial flowers, especially the rose, have been very popular, and when the reaction comes for real flowers, the florist will be quick to appreciate the change.

There are innumerable ways of wearing flowers attractively but what looks well on one person may not be so attractive on another. Just as each person must choose for himself what clothes he is to wear to the best advantage, so must every one decide for himself what flowers are the best becoming. The color idea is very important. Yellows, for example, are not well adapted for evening wear, for they lack cheerfulness. The red rose in the dark hair is as we all know a beautiful combination, but in the blond hair we prefer to see the rose of a more delicate tint. As for the character of the flower itself, we can easily draw preferences. The vivacious athletic girl can wear most any flower with a dash which might not be so becoming to her delicate friend, who would choose a single rosebud.

From the time that Egyptian maidens used the lotus flower as a means of personal adornment to our present modern up-to-dateness we find the ever present impulse to wear flowers and we believe that this natural instinct will be preserved provided the wearing of flowers is not made ridiculous by the introduction of unnecessary paraphernalia in their wearing. GEO. W. WIENHOEBER.

Chicago.

[The accompanying drawing showing the correct manner of carrying a bride's bouquet and its proper size, etc., was made for the Review by Mr. Wienhoebler at our special request, and the article itself was also written upon request. We feel sure both will be of unusual interest to our readers. Mr. Wienhoebler is a son of Mr. E. Wienhoebler, the well-known Chicago florist, and we are pleased to say takes a broad and generous interest in the welfare of the profession to which he expects to devote his business life.—Ed.]

FAIRY FLOWERS.

When and where or on what emblems, if any, can "Fairy flowers" be used to advantage and what is the general way, if any, of using them? W. P.

If "Fairy flower" is meant milkweed balls or pompons, which are by some called "Fairy flowers," we may inform our friend that they are used for what is termed "festooning" dried or preserved flower designs. Years ago they were more popular and were used to good advantage in grass bouquets, palattes, panels, horseshoes, wreaths and the class of designs intended for lasting ornamentation. They are used at the present time, but only by those having cheap trade. They can be had in almost any color, and cost from 75c to $1.25 per 100.

On principle we are opposed to dried work, but realize the fact that many florists are so situated that this class of material constitutes no little part of their trade. By the term "festooning" is meant to put clusters or longer flowers above a groundwork of capes or immer-telles. IVERA.

Chrysanthemums.

Don't be the least bit afraid that you are late planting chrysanthemums. There seems about as good a demand every fall of late as there ever was for moderate-priced flowers, and those planted any time this month will still make good flowers. You can also keep propagating. We have propagated the end of this month, planted out the end of August, and produced most useful flowers—not large, but still they sold well at a paying price. I will repeat again, as I have often told you, that you must keep those cuttings situated and shaded and then they will root. We used to think once that it was necessary to put up a hot bed to root chrysanthemum cuttings in summer, but it is not if you will give the propagating bed plenty of water and never allow them to wilt.

Crimson Rambles.

Although the Crimson Rambler roses did not sell quite as well last year as formerly it is most desirable that we should all have some nice plants. It is only in the very large cities that $10 or $15 plants are wanted. Something that will sell for from $3 to $5 is much more in demand. I have had no luck with plants lifted, although perhaps if I had had them on my own place and could have lifted them from the ground and in few minutes had them potted and carefully treated it would have been a success. In fact, there is no doubt about it because Mr. Craig and Mr. Harris and others do it successfully.

We started dormant plants in April, got them to make three or four good strong canes under glass, and it is about that now that I want to say a word. They should by this time have made about all the growth that is desirable. That is, canes five or six feet long and as large as you want them. They will do better after the middle of this month out of doors. Stand them out in the broad sun and put some plunging material round the pots or you cannot keep them well watered. Any rains we may get up to the middle of September will not hurt them. In fact, they would have to be regularly watered; but after that heavy rains should be avoided and as it is not likely that you will have many of them it pays well in case of heavy rains to just lay the plants on their sides. As the ripening process will have begun your object is to get a good, large, well-ripened cane, which will force with the greatest ease and be bound to give you flowers at any time.

Bermuda Lilies

Nothing makes us feel that the cycle of the year is round again so much as when we begin to receive our first consignment of Bermuda lilies. We think, "Here we are again, started in for another year." The early bulbs from Bermuda will soon be arriving. For the past few years, and perhaps always, the lilies we cut from November on till February have been the most profitable of all the lilies. Whatever difference of opinion there is about the method of growing the Easter lot there is no doubt but what the early five to seven bulbs should be planted at once into their flowering pots, and 5-inch is the size.

A shaded house is just about as cool as a cold frame, but if you are crowded inside a cold frame will do very well. Let the top of the bulb be about even with the surface of the soil. Give them

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Callas.

I am asked occasionally what treatment to give callas. They should be out of doors laying on their sides and they are all the better for not having any water at all. If allowed to get partially wet during storms they make a growth which I believe is not good for them. Better rest entirely until time to start in the fall, or say early in September, when they should be shaken out and every bit of old soil taken from them and repotted in 5, 6 or 7-inch pots according to the size of the tuber. The young offshoots that were potted last fall when you started the old plants and had been grown along in 3-inch pots during winter should now be in 5-inch and plunged out of doors. Plunge the pots to the rims in the earth, or, just as well, in some well-decayed manure. If constantly supplied with water these plants will make a sturdy growth and make good flowering plants by next September. It is surprising what plants they will make in one summer if liberally treated.

Caladiums.

The fancy caladium is now one of our best summer decorative plants. By this time you should have some handsome pots, but they will not do their best unless given plenty of pot room. If in 6 or 8-inch pots they should now go into a 10-inch or even 12-inch and they will in August make splendid specimens. If well supplied with water they will stand almost the broad sun under glass.

Cinerarias.

Those who grow early cinerarias, that is, seed sown in March or April, with the idea of having them in flower next Christmas, will need to keep a sharp lookout for them during summer. The heat is their greatest enemy. An ideal place for them is a cold frame with the pots plunged and the glass raised both back and front and the sash taken off entirely at night when there is no danger of a storm. Keep tobacco stems strewn on the surface of the plunging material and that will save a great deal of fumigating. As you all know, green fly is most troublesome on these plants.

one good watering and then cover an inch or so with some spent hops of some light material. This will obviate so much watering and boards can be placed over the top of the frame or heavily shaded sash. If you want them very early in a month they should be taken inside and brought right along.

Pansies.

If you raise pansies in the field protect only by brush or straw. The end of this month is time to sow. I watched a large pansy grower in my vicinity and he seems to have little trouble in raising all the seedlings he wants. He sows in small beds about four feet wide in drills three or four inches apart. It may be a little more labor to sow them in drills but it is a saving of seed and much surer to get an even come up. Neither does he shade, but waters regularly every evening. Pansies that are to be wintered in a cold frame need not be sown until the middle of August, but when left unprotected in the field it is desirable to have strong plants before winter sets in.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

BOSTON FERNS.

What size of Boston ferns are most salable in New York? I am in the suburb of Hartford and can sell more six-inch pans for 25 to 40 cents than any other size, but in the city center 50 to 75 cent sizes go the best and but a few $2 to $3 plants can be sold. I am growing a large stock of fine plants with a view of sending some to the New York market and would like to get an idea as to the proportion to grow of the different sizes. In 1,000 plants how many should be in 6-inch, how many in 7-inch, 8, 9, 10 and 12-inch? I grow my plants very thick at the bottom.

CONNECTICUT.

It is difficult to answer the above satisfactorily. In New York here a few growers make a specialty of growing Boston ferns to sell at from $30 to $40 per 1,000. We would be inclined to advise any one so far away as Hartford to grow for that class. Then there are others who grow to supply the auction rooms in the fall; these plants are in pots ranging from 4 to 8-inch, and they bring all the way from 8 to 60 cents. Others grow their ferns on benches, and pot and pan them a month or so before sent to the city. There are so many growers around this city, and the stock is so abundant that buyers and the general public have become extremely critical. We doubt if it would pay any one such a distance to depend on this market unless his stock was extra fine and he dealt with an honest element. Then again buyers usually prefer to see stock before they buy.

However, Boston fern is good stock to grow, and many a chance there is for some one to make money by extensively cultivating it. The sizes most valuable in New York, and we may say in every large city, are those in from 8 to 12-inch pans; in sizes smaller than 6-inch they are only useful for basket or design work. Where a florist has but little room it is wiser to grow in small sizes, for then the stock can be grown closer together; it is an easy matter to make up plants, yet the market demands that they be established. A Boston fern must be very good to be worth $3 to the trade.

No one could figure on the proportion of sizes you ought to have in 1,000 plants unless you have them all equal now and wish to clear them out together. The best plan is to provide for succession, always having a dozen or two of every size ready for shipment; in this way we would keep 600 plants as reserve, and in your case 200 6-inch, 150 8-inch, 40 10-inch and 10 to 12. Circumstances we know not of may alter the case, but we are under the impression that if Hartford, New London, New Haven and such places were properly catered to good prices could be had; many of the florists in those places come to New York for their stock. Boston ferns can very often be bought here for less than prices quoted by our Hartford friend.

IVERA.

A BASKET BED.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph of a novelty in bedding this season at Humboldt Park, Chicago. The idea was conceived and carried out by Mr. Max Kleppin, the head gardener. The plants are replaced by others as soon as out of bloom and the arrangement is therefore changed at intervals. The effect is that of a huge basket of flowers on the lawn.

CHICAGO TO BUFFALO.

The Chicago Florists' Club transportation committee has arranged with the Wabash railway for transportation to the Buffalo convention of the Society of American Florists, Aug. 6th to 10th.

The party will leave Sunday, Aug. 4, exact hour yet to be determined, and reach Buffalo Monday morning. The committee expects to have an unusually well appointed special train. The rate will be $13.00 for the round trip, and less should there be any cut in rates by the railroads for that week. The sleeping car fare will be $3.00 a berth each way. An excellent dining car service is assured.

Florists in the west and northwest are cordially invited to travel with the Chicago party.

Berths may be reserved by addressing any member of the committee as below.

- E. F. WINTERSOX,

THE annual Convention Number of the Florists' Review will be issued Aug. 8th and will contain a report of the Buffalo convention.

ROSES AT THE PAN-AMERICAN.

The accompanying pictures were taken of two beds. The one with the gardeners sitting in the background is a bed of Paul Neyron and contains 500 plants, being nearly 900 square feet in size. The other bed, showing some of the towers of the Triumphal Causeway in the background, is a bed of Ulrich Brunner, and has the same number of plants as the other and the same area. Excuses are poor things at any time, but I can assure my readers that, although the Paul Neyron bed was a few days past its best, the picture of the Ulrich Brunner gives but a poor idea of the gorgeous show of roses it was a week previous to the time the view was taken. About a week before the picture was taken we could have cut 5,000 perfect Ulrich Brunner off this one bed.

Now, it occurs to me that if roses could be grown as successfully by the average cultivator there would be far more plant-well-known firm accompanied their shipment with a note which read: "We have pruned them to save you trouble." That I appreciated, but if I had left them as they had pruned them I don't believe I would have saved 10 per cent of the plants, with all the care, so I immediately cut them down to within three inches of the ground; in fact, you could scarcely see the roses when we had finished planting.

Last June was the very reverse of this. Hot, dry winds, but not a drop of rain. I do attach a great deal of importance to the simple, yet the only way to plant—viz., there was ample room made for the roots, only sufficient soil put in to keep the roots in place, then the hole soaked and a few minutes afterward the excavation filled up with dry soil. That's the beginning and the foundation of success and the right way to plant. As this four feet of clay beneath the beds was in all kinds of lumps, water poured through it as through a sieve; entirely different would have had a chance to ripen them off, but the growth was all made long after the usual season.

About the middle of November the canes were shortened to about two feet from the ground and a string put around them to keep them from breaking down. After one good frost I had six inches of leaves and litter put all over the beds. Nothing more was done until the spring, when the beds were uncovered, the bushes loosened up, and I then found that the canes were all killed back to the line where the litter had protected them, so hard pruning was necessary. But even if they had not been killed back I should have cut them back almost as hard. On an average not more than three to four inches of last year's growth was left on. The beds were forked over as soon as the ground was dry, and during a week's dry weather we gave them one good soaking of water. No more cultivation was done to them.

We are asked repeatedly, mostly by ed and more encouragement to plant, and it might be interesting to a few to know just how they were cultivated. To begin with, the spot on which these beds exist was one mass of clay, excavated from the mirror lakes, and raised above the normal elevation more than four feet. The beds were excavated out of this clay to a depth of fifteen inches and filled up with a strong, heavy loam, which had been the surface soil of this territory and used as a pasture for many years. To it was added about one-fourth of cow manure. No other fertilizer of any kind was or has been used.

The roses for these two beds were received from Ellwanger & Barry, of Rochester, about the first day of June, a good many weeks later than any customer would receive them. They were budded long and evidently their own growing, not imported stock, and I do not believe that any such success could have been had with imported stock. This from the natural hardpan. So every four or five days the beds were soaked and then, as soon as possible, hoed.

This treatment was continued until the roses showed decided signs of breaking, which was almost the first of July; then they were mulched with two inches of rotten manure, but the weekly watering was continued. From this on they grew rapidly, and by the end of the growing season, say the middle of October, we had canes as thick as your little finger and five feet high. As we had abundance of rains in September the watering was dispensed with.

If there was any mistake made in the cultivation of these roses up to this date it was simply this: That they had made such a prodigious growth in this soil and with the watering that the wood was rather green and soft when winter came on, but that could not be helped. If planted at the proper time and the growth produced earlier in the season we ladies: "How did you keep the bugs off them?" That did trouble me slightly, and I thought perhaps I would have to resort to tobacco water, but I made men get down on their knees and throw water at them hard enough to put them out if they had been on fire, and that put out all bugs and aphids.

It is only fair to say that there were two other beds of the same size as those pictured. One was Jacques and one was of mixed varieties. Nelson Bogue of Batavia also had eight other beds, holding each about 200 plants, equally good in quality and giving a magnificent display, but consisting of many more varieties and consequently not quite such a show.

If these roses had been planted the middle of April, the usual time, I would consider that any good gardener could have produced these results, but being planted seven weeks later and being very much dried up when received I do consider it a triumph of science and soil.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

NEWPORT, R. I.

The Summer Exhibition.

What should we say truthfully of the Newport show? We know it is not fair to condemn what is usually seen at exhibitions, for the man who honestly puts any plant or flower on exhibition, no matter how poor, deserves consideration, if not praise. It is the gentlemen who have good stock but are afraid to show and whose only intent on visiting a show is to criticise or deride the efforts of others that we take pleasure in "roasting."

We made a trip from New York especially to see the third annual summer show of the Newport Horticultural Society, which was held in Masonic Hall July 2 and 3. The exhibition was previously announced for June 25 and 26, but it was thought wise to change the date. It was further announced that the American Rose Society would hold its annual summer show in conjunction with the Newport event. There has been some remarkable announcements made by the officials of the American Rose Society, and they at least owe the horticultural press and the craft in general an apology for their feeling.

But the Newport show—it was a financial failure; scarcely any of the public attended. The exhibits were few compared with what they should be for so famous a place, Newport being accredited with the finest gardens in America, but the sacrifices in time, money and mental and physical energy made by the faithful few deserves the highest praise from every friend of horticulture. There may be numerous reasons assigned for the failure of this show—the place it was held in, the manner it was held, and the time. Newport's season does not commence till August; a flower show given there must take the form of a garden fete with its floral parade etc., and must depend on society, not the regular residents, for patronage. As "Ivra" stated in his notes two weeks ago, this society could do more good in promoting one floral fete than by ten years of such shows.

The plants shown were clean and well grown, but nothing very remarkable. For best 6 crotons there were two entries; Arthur Griffin won 1st and David McIntosh second. In class for 6 dracaenas there were also two sets, the above parties winning in the same order. There were no entries in the class for hegonias, one entry for 6 tuberous hegonias, for which Charles got 1st. There were several entries for specimen kentias; first went to Charles Stark, 2d to Andrew Meikle, 3d to Bruce Butterton. There was one entry for specimen areca and C. Stark got 1st for a handsome Areca lutescens. For any other palm 1st went to Bruce Butterton for pritchardia, and 3d to A. Meikle for phenix. In class for 6 ferns one entry, 1st, Arthur Griffin.

Competition for fern dishes intended for table decoration was very interesting. The classes should be at every show. For 12-inch dish of Farleyense, 1st, A. Meikle; 2d, W. R. Barth. For 12-inch, any other fern or ferns, 1st, Richard Gardner; 2d, A. Meikle. For 18-inch flat basket of foliage plants, 1st, A. Griffin; 2d, Richard Gardner; 3d, Charles Stark. Group of foliage, 100 feet, 1st, Silver cup, Arthur Griffin; 2d, Charles Stark. There were only two entries in above class; it was very difficult to decide the winner; color won and, strange to say, enallias and other grasses formed no little part in the group winning 1st. There were two entries for group of caladiums and ferns; 1st went to Bruce Butterton; 2d to A. Griffin. In the former ferns predominated and in the latter caladiums, which was a very fine collection.

There were three entries for the group of fifty stove and greenhouse plants. These were very good exhibits and took up the center of the hall. Charles Stark won 1st prize, $50; 2d to A. Meikle. D. McIntosh won a bronze medal for specimen dracena. Wadley & Smythe showed an interesting group of dwarfed Japanese trees for which they received a certificate of merit. The Society of American Florists' silver medal was awarded to Colin Robertson for his new dwarf canna "Bobs." This was exceedingly dwarf. Only three plants were shown in 5-inch pots. The flowers are of Crozy color and type but larger, and the plants did not exceed 18 inches. The canna is considered a good one at Newport. The society's silver medal was awarded the Blue Hill Nursery Company, South Braintree, Mass., for a very interesting and showy collection of herbaceous flowers. This comprised sixty-four vases, and they were labeled with popular and botanical names. They made a good showing. There was one exhibit of carnations; they consisted of several varieties. Perry Belmont's gardener was awarded a bronze medal for them.

The display of cut roses was rather a disappointment for a place with so many fine gardens. There were scarcely forty varieties of roses in the combined exhibits and there may have been about 1,000 roses staged. In the class for 25 H. P.'s, distinct varieties, 1st went to A. Meikle, 2d to Hugh Williamson; 12 H. P.'s distinct, 1st, Colin Robertson; 2d A. Meikle; 3d, H. Williamson; 12 blooms, six varieties, 1st, D. McIntosh; 2d, Hugh Williamson; 3d, Alex Frazer; 12 blooms, red, one variety, Charles Stark, 1st with Brummers; 12 blooms pink, 1st Perry Belmont with Laings, 2d A. Meikle, 3d A. Griffin; 25 blooms any variety, 1st Thomas Beattie with a mixed lot of reds, 2d Colin Robertson; 25 American Beauties, two equal 1sts to Perry Belmont and A. Griffin; 25 blooms hybrid teas, 1st Perry Belmont.

The silver cup for best 100 H. P. roses in not less than three varieties brought out the greatest competition of any class at the show; there were five entries, all very good. Hugh Williamson won first; his blooms were not so good as the others but he had twenty varieties against three and five in the other competitors; 2d prize went to A. Griffin, and the 3d to Alex Frazer. Gibson Bros. put up a fine lot of roses, which attracted considerable attention. A certificate of merit was awarded to M. Horvath, Cleveland, O., for his rose No. 3. The others arrived in too bad a condition to be judged. A certificate was also awarded J. R. Caswell for display of roses.

There was quite a tussle over made-up work for basket of roses arranged for effect. Colin Robertson got first with basket of Luizets and pink ribbon, A. Meikle 2d, and J. Boyd 3d. There were five entries in the above class. The first prize was $5. They were all large handle baskets and the roses in some of them could not have been bought for three times five. They were all shown by private gardeners but some of them were made by florists. It is about time the Newport retailers put their own names to their work; if the prizes are not worthy attend the meetings and make them so. There were three hand bouquets shown, 1st Tom Fieldhouse, 2d C. Robertson, 3d John Boyd. The last-named gardener exhibited a lot of grand Marechal Neils; too solid arrangement spoiled their effectiveness.

There were three entries for table decoration and they were all disappointing; $50 was the prize. They were all round, set for eight; 1st went to Andrew Meikle with Baroness Rothschild and Luizet buds, 2d to A. Griffin with allmandas and 3d to Gibson Bros., with Laings.

There were only three plates of strawberries. C. Robertson won 1st with each; six peaches from Perry Belmont's got 1st. Vegetables were small, the prizes being divided between a few of the names mentioned above. One vase of Liberty was shown, Laing was the best pink rose at the show, Brunner the best red; Hopper and Neyron divided honors for size.

Admission was 50 cents the first day, 25 cents second day. The judges were Richard Gardner, Fred Smythe and Bruce Butternut. There was some grumbling because outsiders were not called as judges. Perhaps it is a mistake to appoint local men, especially when they are also exhibitors; be the men ever so good and honest doubts will arise, but go it again. Newporters, and don't humbug a generous patron and enthusiast like Mrs. Burke-Roche and give Tom Fieldhouse more assistance.

J. I. DONLAX.

Now is the time to prepare your ads. for our annual Convention Number to be issued Aug. 8th.

BUFFALO.

Various Items.

After two weeks of Turkish bath weather it broke up with a frightful storm on Friday night and we have now ideal Buffalo weather, but we should not grumble for we were in ice compared with many other cities. Visitors to the Pan-American can rest assured that whatever else they may expect they will be sure to get comfortable weather. Business has been unusually good for this time of the year, but that was expected. It is rather difficult now to get good roses. Little dependence after all can be placed on any outside roses.

I took a flying trip to Corfu the other day and found carnations in this neighborhood about three times as large as they were at this same date last year. Mr. Troup's establishment at the west end of the village has 20,000 very fine plants. They are overhauling the place, cleaning out thoroughly, which it much needed, and will be ready to plant by the 1st of August. Two houses of roses planted early in June have made a good start. This place, formerly the Webb establishment, is now called the Huntley Greenhouses. At the west end of the village there is the Montrose Greenhouse; so it is getting to be a very Scottish village.

We have some earnest weekly meetings of the Florists' Club, and there will be nothing left undone to take care of the visitors. Mr. F. R. Pierson was here for several days the beginning of last week and was delighted with everything at the Pan-American. He has presented the club with a $50 silver cup to be awarded to the highest aggregate score in the bowling tournament.

A number of our local people have also contributed smaller prizes, so in addition to the large cups there will be any amount of prizes to roll for. So little interest has been taken in the three-men team that I suppose it is likely to drop through. I am rather sorry for this, but what with the tournament and the individual the day seems pretty well filled up.

I hope that visitors will not think they have seen all there is to be seen when the Pan-American and Niagara Falls are done. We are naturally very proud of our residence streets. Nothing can exceed the beauty of Delaware avenue, North, Summer, Linwood and many others. When you come to this city do not fail to take a look at these beautiful residence avenues.

Visitors have been rather scarce this week. With the exception of Mr. Pierson and Mr. Fotheringham we have only had Mr. A. F. J. Baur of Indianapolis, who keeps your readers so well posted on how to do carnations.

Pan-American Notes.

Our city was visited on Friday last by one of the heaviest and longest thunder storms in our recollection. The wind blew and the rain fell in torrents, but after all very little damage was done. It did beat down a bed of Crimson Rambler roses which I mentioned in my last notes. They were on the Fourth of July one of the most brilliant sights that could be seen and are still very attractive. To all the rest of the plants in the beds the storm was, of course, a benefit, as it gave them a thorough soaking, and now we expect a rapid and luxuriant growth. We believe that we are going to have, at least on many of the hybrid perpetual roses, a second crop. This is not usually seen. A bed of 500 Brummers, which was a most brilliant sight until two weeks ago, has already sent up a growth of two feet and will, I think, be another splendid sight in a few weeks. Messrs. Jackson & Perkins, of Newark, N. Y., sent us last year some plants of their new Rambler rose, "Dorothy Perkins." This has exactly the habit of the well-known Crimson Rambler, but they did not make quite as vigorous a growth, but have flowered splendidly and have been very brilliant. This seems to me to be a great acquisition and I believe would be a good forcing rose. The individual flower is larger than the Crimson Rambler with not quite such heavy trusses, but it is a beautiful shell pink in color.

The nymphs planted in the borders of the lakes by Henry A. Dreer last summer, which was a very best and add much to the beauty of the lakes. There are a great number of species and varieties. These are best seen when taking a trip in the gondolas. The group of herbaceous plants also planted by the Henry A. Dreer firm are now very interesting. Some just criticism has been made on the want of labeling each variety of rose. In this case the labeling is well done and the herbaceous plants have all very conspicuous and distinct labels. Many interesting plants are now in bloom and some beautiful irises are flowering. J. C. Vaughan has made a fine exhibit in a broad border encircling the fountain in the center of the Rose Garden. This consists of a great variety of plants and nearest the fountain, in the background, is a fine collection of carnations. The whole should be very fine after they have attained a good growth.

A bed of hybrid delphiniums is attracting a good deal of attention. Few people know what fine spikes of flowers these give us. They are the exhibit of one of our Park Commissioners and an enthusiastic gardener, Dr. Matthew D. Mann. Visitors will soon have an opportunity to see what a magnificent rose the Cochet is for summer blooming. A large circle bed planted by the Dinee & Conard Company is increasing in beauty every day. This seems to be above all others the most desirable summer blooming rose.

Among other interesting things which the government of Mexico has done, Mr. McDowell, their agent, brought up a fine collection of tuberous rooted begonias, which were planted in the Conservatory about the last of April. Several hundred of them are now in flower. James Vick's Sons of Rochester are making their booth very attractive these days with cases of cut flowers, often replenished, and fine specimens of tuberous rooted begonias in 6- and 7-inch pots. Henry A. Dreer has also sent us many beautiful irises.

The Department of Works are still planting many thousands of plants. In the Court of Cypress and the Court of Lilies a large amount of carpet bedding is being done. It seems rather late to be still planting out, but for the later visitors it will be all right. Most of the State Buildings have ornamented their grounds and verandas with plants and flowers, which has added greatly to the attractiveness of that part of the grounds. I would like particularly that visitors from Detroit take notice of the very handsome display that the Parks and Boulevards Commission have made in a large bed on the north side of the Conservatory, as you enter the north door of the Horticulture Building. This covers an area of 6,500 square feet, divided into a number of beds with sod between them. In the center is a fine group of palms, which is one of the most attractive groups on the grounds and certainly the most costly. It is well and handsomely done and few cities would help out a sister city as Detroit has done for Buffalo.

The man from Idaho in the Horticulture Building received some fine cherries this morning and wrote a card which reads: "And the children of Israel saw the fruit in Lebanon but they ate it not." A visitor added: "But Eve partook of the forbidden fruit." Then the Idaho man, as a word of warning concluded it by adding: "Yes, honey, and it didn't do a thing to her, did it?"

PHILADELPHIA.

Business.

Business is remarkably good for this season of the year. The mortality due to the terrific heat of last week created an active demand for white flowers. One grower said that the Fourth of July, usually considered as the florists' only holiday, was a day of unusual activity, a small Easter, in fact. While the cause is greatly to be deplored the result is gratifying.

Double white petunias at 50 to 75 cents per 100 have sold well, also white roses and sweet peas. The heat has spoiled much stuff, sweet peas being heavy sufferers.

The Floral Exchange is cutting some fine Golden Gates, which find ready sale. Wm. J. Moore is handling some very good Kaiserins.

William Wunder, of Pittville, is sending in some fine Maids; as fine as can be seen in town. Wonder how William does it.

John Kuhn, of Olney, is cutting some excellent carnations that can be seen in J. J. Habermehl & Son's store. Mrs. B. Lippincott and John Habermehl are two of his best sorts.

Various Items.

Henry F. Mitchell is expecting his Lilium Harrisii next week. He has a photograph of his bulbs growing in the fields which show them to be in fine condition. One field contains 85,000 bulbs, the other 40,000; 125,000 Harrisii is a goodly number for one firm to handle and is strong proof of the confidence of this firm's customers.

H. H. Battles has completed his new greenhouses. They are built on a hill-side facing south and will be heated by hot water. The piping is now being pushed. The houses are light and strongly built. A fine shed is at one end. This shed has two levels with steps between and an office on one side. Part of this shed is to be used for a cold storage room for shrubs and other things. The water is drawn from a tank fed by two rams. Mr. Battles has a large collection of shrubs and hardy perennials which will prove very valuable in a few years.

Robert A. Stewart has moved into his new store two doors from his former location on Thirteenth street, above Walnut.

Jennings Bros., of Olney, have finished their remodeled range of glass, which is planted with Maids and Brides in solid beds. The effect is neat and business-like.

Twelve men have qualified to enter the final tournament to decide upon the team to represent this city at Buffalo. Twelve games will be rolled on alleys belonging to other clubs and the six players having the highest scores will compose the team. The next two will be the substitutes, and the four remaining players will, like true sportsmen, hold themselves in readiness to represent this city in case of emergency. These twelve brothers are Adelsberger, Anderson, Baker, Conner, Gibson, Graham, Harris, Kift, Moss, Robertson, Starkey and Westcott. PHIL.

BALTIMORE.

Various Notes.

This section has been visited within forty-eight hours with heavy and needed rains, and today (July 8) the temperature is about 20 degrees lower than last week, which made a record for fierce heat.

The intensely warm weather has finished what was left of the old stocks and nothing is yet coming in of the newly planted. Nearly all the houses have been pulled out and planting is being pushed ahead as fast as the order of the season will allow.

Outdoor roses are not salable this year. There seem to be no Kaiserins and the Coquets, white and pink, fail to keep up the record they made last year. Sweet peas are about done. Asters are coming in in small lots. No outdoor carnations are arriving, and those from inside are inferior in quality. Trade for the time of year continues fairly brisk.

The season has been a good one generally, and most growers are fairly well satisfied with the results.

W. Howard Gilbert has opened a nice store at 1126 West Baltimore street, and begins operations with a good promise of success, though the location is over where he will find ample competition from the stores already established.

B'ndling is being resumed. Andrew Anderson at Govanstown, is building a new rose house 20x100 feet. Richard Vincent, Jr., & Son, near White Marsh, are about beginning a new house 35x300 feet. R.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

A shift from torrid heat to quite cool weather has been followed by a further shortening of the supply, and roses of any kind are now scarce and the quality of all is very poor. There are really no good roses of any kind to be had. Kaiserin is the best, and they are poor enough. The best of these go at $4. There is still some shipping demand, but local trade seems to be quite dead aside from an occasional funeral order. In carnations Crocker and Triumph are the best among the pinks and Hill as a white. A few blooms from outside plants are beginning to come in but they are not yet numerous enough to have much effect, and the quality of flowers from indoor plants has been sadly lowered. Prices range from 50 cents to $1 for the best.

The new rose Marquise Littia is not realizing its early promises as a good summer rose, the blooms having become small and off color.

A New Era for Lincoln Park.

Once more Lincoln Park has a superintendent who is a horticulturist and not a politician. The new board of commissioners has appointed R. H. Warder superintendent at a salary of $5,000 a year, he having been made both superintendent and secretary in order to provide the salary noted. Mr. Warder is a man of the highest character and of national reputation among horticulturists, and was for seven years superintendent of the parks of Cincinnati. He will assume his new duties July 15.

Mr. Warder will find much to do in Lincoln Park, for while the floral department has been well kept up by Head-Gardener Sironback the other departments have suffered severely during the administrations of the political livery stable keepers, plumbers and other cheap politicians. The sweeping change in methods at the park is due to the appointment on the board of such men as Bryan Lathrop, F. T. Simmons, B. A. Kennedy and W. W. Tracy, all men of standing who are serving the people and not the politician. A few politicians remain on the board, but they are fortunately in the minority and there is good reason to hope that the work so ably inaugurated by former Superintendent Pettigrew before the politicians got control may again progress.

Hort. Society Meeting.

The quarterly meeting of the Horticultural Society of Chicago was held last Tuesday afternoon and considerable business left over from the annual meeting was transacted. Messrs. Emil Buettner and W. N. Rudd were elected as the two new members of the executive committee. A new board of directors was elected as follows: S. W. Alberton, E. Buckingham, J. J. Glessner, H. N. Higginbotham, C. L. Hutchinson, Frank O. Lowden, John J. Mitchell, M. A. Ryerson, H. G. Selfridge, Otto Young.

The election of secretary and assistant secretary was laid over till the next meeting and a committee appointed to present a list of desirable names for the positions. W. N. Rudd was re-elected treasurer. R. H. Warder, the newly appointed superintendent of Lincoln Park, was elected to membership in the society. The meeting adjourned to meet again at the same place Aug. 21 at 3 p. m. A meeting of the executive committee was held immediately after the general meeting and action taken on matters connected with the annual exhibition in November.

Various Items.

The committee has issued a stirring announcement of the coming picnic of the Florists' Club to be held in Reissig's Grove, Riverside, Wednesday, July 24. The program includes baseball, running races and other athletic sports as well as dancing. Take Garfield Park Metropolitan elevated and Forty-eighth street, thence by trolley to the grounds. The first crowd will start from the Randolph street elevated station at 11 a. m.

The Florists' Club's transportation committee has issued an announcement stating that the Wabash railway has been selected for the trip to Buffalo. It will be found elsewhere in this issue.

C. M. Dickinson, of E. H. Hunt, started Wednesday on a ten-day fishing and hunting trip. The first stop will be at Mackinac, thence through Lake Huron to

Bowling.

The bowlers tried to play two series of games last Tuesday night, but a total of five was all that could be worked in. Next Tuesday night a total of four games will be played, and thus complete three series in two nights. In the five games the Wholesalers took three from the Seedsmen and one from the Growers. The Retailers won two from the Growers and two from the Seedmen (the latter by default), while the Growers won one from the Retailers and one from the Wholesalers. Two of those dear prizes were captured, one by Jos. Foerster, with 204, and one by Oscar Kreitling with 229. The Wholesalers lifted the record for game to 856. Following are the scores:

OFFICERS: Pres., Patrick O'Mara, New York; Vice-Pres., Wm. F. Kasting, Buffalo; Secy, Wm. J. Stewart, 79 Mill Street, Boston; Treas., H. B. Beatty, Old City, Pa.

The annual dues, $3.00, may be remitted to the secretary prior to the meeting and thereby avoid the crush at the secretary's desk on the opening day. He will mail receipts and badges for 1901.

The usual rate of one and one-third fares for the round trip on the certificate plan has been granted by the Frank Line Association. By depositing your certificate with the joint agent at the Exposition on or before August 4 and paying the sum of $1.00 you may obtain an extension of the return ticket to August 24.

ST. LOUIS. The Market.

The market is quiet, but the demand is sufficient to consume all the good stock that is coming in. Good roses are limited in quantity; stock of second quality is quite plentiful, but consists of only Brides and Maids, Perles, Meteors and Beauties are very scarce. The best of the rose stock is bringing $3 per 100, and that from that down to $1. Beauties are $2 per dozen.

Carnations are in great demand, especially white, but they are very small and the little shriveled up blossoms are enough to drive away the few customers that come in. A few hundred fine Flora Hills from Overman's brought $1.50 per 100, but the bulk of the stock sold at from 50 cents to $1 per 100. A great many of the carnations that came in last Saturday, were only fit for the dump. Outdoor stuff is very scarce owing to the dry and hot weather and the only flowers there now are for the retailer to make up his work with are roses and carnations.

Notes.

S. S. Skidelsky, of Philadelphia, was a visitor the past week. He reports a great sale on the Nelson carnation.

Wm. Hncke, of Belleville, was in town the past week calling on the trade. "Bill" says it's too dry and hot in our town for good carnations.

Wm. Ellison, of Ellison & Tesson, is up north enjoying a summer vacation. Arthur Ellison, of the same firm, left Saturday for the same place, where he will remain until time for the convention, then go to Chicago and travel with the Chicago party to Buffalo. This is his plan at present.

"Fritz" Weber, is back again after enjoying a two weeks' honeymoon. Fritz's face is too familiar at the wholesale houses to remain away long.

F. H. Meinhardt, chairman of the executive committee, reports that the preliminary list has been mailed to the growers and that the dates of this year's show will be November 13, 14 and 15. The special prizes are also coming in nicely and the show will be as good as ever this year.

Most all of the stores closed up a half day on the Fourth. Only the Grand avenue people kept open—they never close.

Miss Theresa Badaracco has returned from West Baden Springs much improved in health.

George E. Kessler, of Kansas City, Mo., has been selected as landscape architect for the World's Fair. Mr. Kessler laid out the park and boulevard system of Evans City.

Miss Fera M. Reed, assistant librarian of the Missouri Botanical Garden, was killed by a train while sketching near Louisiana, Mo. Miss Reed, who was almost totally deaf, was sketching a botanical specimen on the tracks when struck by the Burlington train. Miss Reed was a prominent member of the Englemann Botanical Club and had been connected with Shaw's Garden as indexer and assistant librarian for more than ten years.

Bowling.

The bowling club rolled six games last Monday night. The weather was cool, but only four members put in an appearance. Kuehn and Bencke rolled some good games. The club would like those who are bowlers and who are going to Buffalo to attend next Monday night, as a meeting will be held and the team selected. Should the attendance be so that no team can be selected, it will be decided not to send a team to Buffalo to represent St. Louis. The scores of Monday night were as follows:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	Tl. Av.
C. A. Kuehn	297	157	154	136	214	142	1040 173

ST. PAUL.

That hail storm reported by Mr. Bussjaeger took place on June 17th and it lasted but two minutes, but the results were bad enough. I was on the wagon about a mile and a half from home when I saw the storm coming. I had my boy of 18 and my little one of 3 years with me. We put the horse to a gallop and managed to get home under shelter just before the rain and hail began to fall.

My loss in glass broken was 800 lights, considerably more than the 400 to 500 reported by Mr. B. And had the storm lasted 10 minutes I doubt if we would have had any left. HENRY KRINKE.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

The less said of trade for the past week the better. Stock of all kinds shows the effect of the hot spell and is not only scarce but of a decidedly poor quality.

Sweet peas, which were in such large supply, are about over now and there is virtually nothing to take their place. Asters will be late this year in this vicinity. At the present they are just showing bud and seem to be at a standstill.

The continued hot weather was beginning to tell on carnations in the field; no rain and a boiling hot sun made their existence rather difficult. The backbone of the hot spell is broken now; the temperature is, on an average, 25 degrees lower. This is a decided relief, not only to the people but to vegetation as well.

Various Items.

As a great many florists have been inquiring about the rate from Cincinnati to Buffalo, I would like to inform them that the rate on all roads will be $12.25 for the round trip, good for ten days. This is considerable cheaper than a rate and a third on the certificate plan. This also includes either a straight trip to Buffalo by rail or to Detroit, Toledo or Cleveland by rail and then to Buffalo via lake steamer, making a very nice trip.

Mr. R. H. Warder, former park superintendent of Cincinnati, has been appointed superintendent of Lincoln Park, Chicago. Mr. Warder is to be congratulated on his good fortune in securing such an enviable position, and I can assure you that Chicago will be well satisfied with her choice.

The committee of the fall festival has decided to award the following prizes for competitions to be held during the fall festival: On Thursday of the first week of the festival, for best five designs, first prize, $100; second prize, $60; third prize, $40. For best extra single design, first prize, $25; second prize, $15; third prize, $10. On Thursday of the second week of the festival, for best display of lodge emblems, not less than five or more than seven pieces, first prize, $100; second prize, $60; third prize, $40.

In judging these displays quality of flowers, workmanship and design will be considered. These competitions will be open to all florists. Now here are some prizes that are well worth capturing and at a time of year, too, when business is slack. So, boys, get a move on yourselves and show us what you can do.

Ben George is a happy man now. Cause, the arrival of a daisy boy at his home. Mother and baby are both doing nicely and Ben is receiving congratulations.

PITTSBURG.

Trade among retailers has been fair this first week in July. It is mostly funeral work owing to the great many deaths occurring from the great heat the beginning of the week.

Really good flowers are not overplentiful, the hot weather seems to be too much for blooms under glass. Kaiserin is the only good rose to be had now. Some carnations are fair and some not near fair. Sweet peas are plentiful and a few herbaceous flowers are coming in, such as coreopsis, achillea, etc. Longiflorum lilies are still to be had; they have been plentiful since last winter.

The growers are busy taking care of carnations in the fields. The season has been so very wet that it was hard to get them planted and worked between rains. The growers mostly have the carnations in the houses yet, but from the looks of some of the blooms offered they would be better on the dump. Roses seem to be about all planted here.

A couple of weeks ago a hail-storm did some damage to glass hereabouts. At the same time a flood hurt florists who have their plants in valleys as Oscar Heid and Breitenbaugh Bros.

On July 1 Blind Bros. succeeded to the establishment of their father, C. Blind, at West View, Allegheny. They have about twelve nice houses and are making improvements right along. One of the brothers, H. L., was married June 18 to Miss Weber, of Perryville. A good many florists attended the wedding and had quite a nice time.

Thursday evening the club meets and will arrange for the picnic at Burki's farm at Bakerstown on the 17th. Mr. Burki wants all to come and join in the fun. BAER.

BUFFALO HOTELS.

No special rates will be made by the Buffalo hotels for convention week except to large parties. Below will be found a list of the leading hotels with the rates per day for rooms on the European plan. The rate given is for the cheapest rooms and there will be no limit to this "up" if the crowds are large and the demand for rooms brisk. But the Buffalo Florists' Club has a long list of other hotels, apartment houses, private houses, etc., from which they can supply accommodations for every one and at any price desired.

Write to the chairman of the hotel committee, W. A. Adams, 479 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y., telling him just what sort of accommodations you wish and at what price and he will see that you get it:

TRAVEL TO THE WEST.

More and more each year Americans are finding out the attractions of our own country, and as they grow to realize the charm of life among the Colorado mountains or in the Yellowstone Park the tendency is toward greater travel West instead of East for health and recreation. The railroads, too, are alive to the new conditions and have made lower tourist rates this year than ever before. And then the train time has been vastly improved, so that now it takes only one night on the road between the Atlantic Coast and Denver, that is, by using the Burlington's fast train from Chicago.

NEW CASTLE, IND.—A heavy wind-storm did serious damage here last week. One of the partly constructed greenhouses in the new range of Reinberg & Weiland was badly handled by the storm. The house is 31x300 and 125 feet of the north side was glazed. The wind blew all the rest of the house standing. About 50 lights of glass were broken in five other houses that were finished. The total loss in the town due to the storm was about $5,000.

AUBORA, ILL.—Remarkable progress is being made in beautifying the city through the efforts of a civic improvement committee of twenty-one members, chosen from the local Woman's Club, which has a membership of 200. They see that the ordinances regarding garbage, etc., are strictly enforced, are planting extensively in public places and are offering prizes for best kept school yards, and best kept back yard in each ward, as well as carrying on the good work in many other directions.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

The Kentucky Society of Florists held their monthly meeting July 3 at the residence of Mr. Henry Fuchs. The attendance was good and considerable business was transacted. The society had the pleasure of having Mr. John Pehrson, representing the Geo. Wittbold Co., of Chicago, with them. After the meeting adjourned Mr. H. Fuchs invited the boys to a fine spread which was very much enjoyed by all present. Mr. John Bohrmann acted as best man and gave the boys a good speech on how to grow Boston ferns.

The boys are talking a good deal about the coming convention at Buffalo. Trade is very quiet here. The weather is a little cooler. Carnations in the field are looking very fine and making a nice growth. Sweet peas are a drug on the market. Roses are very scarce and carnations are small.

Mr. S. J. Thompson, who was injured some time ago, is improving. Mr. Victor Mathis, the Bank street florist, is remodeling his greenhouses.

A Heitz has moved to his new place, just opposite St. Louis cemetery.

W. L. LICHTFELD.

"THE BOXER BOOK."

A copy of this new book by Wm. Roe has been sent us by the publisher, Frank Finsterbach, 3030 Archer Ave., Chicago. It is written to point out the dangerous possibilities of the "Yellow Peril" quite frequently mentioned in the daily press. While the author in endeavoring to warn against all the dangers rather carries it to extremes there is undoubtedly a real menace to white labor, and it is not so very remote. We have not as yet felt the competition of yellow labor to any appreciable extent but Europe has. Already Japan is sending us merchandise that formerly came from Europe, notably fancy baskets, tooth brushes and various objects of ornament. We were informed by an importer and manufacturer of brushes that the Japs took samples of his brushes and imitated them exactly at a price less than the bristles alone cost him. Chinese labor is even cheaper than that of Japan. Five to eight cents a day of fifteen hours for skilled labor means most serious competition even against ordinary machinery, and as Mr. Roe points out, if we freely give them the benefit of our mechanical inventions white labor would stand no chance at all. He recommends the formation of a white "Boxer" society. The price of the book in paper covers is 25 cents and it is well worth reading.

SHIREMANSTOWN, PA.

A few days ago John F. Rupp used up his surplus stock by presenting baskets containing twenty-two assorted bedding plants to each of forty engineers, conductors, expressmen, baggage-men and brakemen on his shipping road as a token of appreciation of their prompt and careful handling of his large shipments of plants. They were highly pleased with the compliment and regarded the baskets of plants as something of great worth.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—Charles Feiker has added a new greenhouse.

WORCESTER, MASS.—At the exhibition of the Horticultural Society June 27 the leading features were roses, hardy flowers, strawberries and vegetables.

BOSTON.

"The star-spangled banner in triumph still waves O'er the land of the trust and the home of its slaves"

And also o'er the ruins of the New England flower traffic for the time being. Summer conditions are in force by a very large majority. The small amount of material coming in handles harder than the usually larger amount at other times of the year. Quality, too, is naturally very poor after such a roast as we have had at the hands of the weather department. This is especially true of the roses, which look as if they had been baked in an oven, although there are quite a few very good Kaiserins, some of them bringing 12 cents, while I have not known of other ordinary kinds bringing over 4 cents for the past week.

Carnations are looking better than roses and are selling all the way from 25 cents to $1.50 per 100. Sweet peas have been coming very irregularly of late and for the most part have been sold very cheaply. For some reason not so much out-door material has come in as might be looked for, but perhaps as much as the market would readily carry, since second-class goods have been unsalable all the time.

Vacation time is surely here, but I do not hear anything said about any extended vacation trips, which seems in sharp contrast with two years ago, when so many went to Europe.

Neither is there so much talk about building as usual at this time of year, probably largely due to prevailing prices of building material. What little I can find out on that subject I will have to roll up snowball fashion for next issue. But I fear it will make a small ball.

"No news is good news," and if we travel on that ticket there is lots of good news. "Silence is the only sound I hear." But James Delay has been laid up quite a few days with a poisoned foot which declines to readily yield to treatment. The cause of the trouble is unknown.

Mr. Clark, secretary of the state prohibition party, but known to the florists because he makes a specialty of delivering all the surplus flowers he can obtain to the different hospitals of the city and in connection with this work took charge of the ice-room at the Park street market until his health forbade, starts Monday, July 10, for a trip to California. He thereby combines business and pleasure, as this gives him a chance to attend certain meetings in his line of work and also to visit his aged mother, who resides there. J. S. MANTER.

UNIONTOWN, PA.—Barton Bros. have secured the services of J. Hellett as foreman. Mr. Hellett for the past several years has been in charge of Capt. S. S. Brown's summer home in the mountains.

CALUMET, MICH.—W. J. Waters, the florist, died July 5.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Chrysanthemums.

I was asked today my opinion on the cheapness of masticas as a glazing material and of that my views will be found in another column. And that reminded me that it is very necessary that the glass should be put into all houses without delay. There is sure to be some broken unless you butt the glass. In that case there is seldom any broken glass. Wherever chrysanthemums are planted out it is very essential that the house be made tight as soon as possible. You have to give air all you possibly can for the sake of the chrysanthemums, but you ought to have facilities to shut it up close for the sake of fumigation.

I don't know that the black aphid is any more troublesome now than it has been in years past. I think perhaps it is not so bad, but it is a great scourge and gives us lots of trouble. There are several ways of keeping it under. Some use fine tobacco dust sprinkled on the plants liberally, and it is well to do it after a syringing. This is effective enough but gives the plants a dirty appearance. Another is to syringe them with tobacco water; either the rose leaf extract of tobacco diluted in one to 75 parts of water, or the Nikoteen, which is strong enough when diluted one to 200 parts of water. But neither of these methods is so effective or so cleanly done as fumigating. Three successive fumigations, not ever strong, will kill all the black aphid; at least for two or three weeks, and when once killed a regular weekly smoking will keep them down.

The best friend we have to keep down the black aphid is the larva of the Lady Bug. The quantity they eat is prodigious. To prove this, chrysanthemums that are planted out as we used to do years ago would be covered with the black aphid were it not for the little Lady Bug, so if you have any in your neighborhood bring them in and foster their growth. I don't think that fumigating hurts the bugs as much as the tobacco water or the dry tobacco dust. When chrysanthemums are making their strongest growth they should be liberally supplied with water. It should be unnecessary to say that should you have any shading on your house of any kind left over from your plant growing business, be sure and get it off. Chrysanthemums want no shade of any kind.

Watering.

We are having at present a very hot, dry time and a good deal of the success of the flower beds will depend on their wise and intelligent care. If you have planted any tuberous rooted begonias give them an abundance of water, but don't water them as you would a bed of cannas. Let the hose run between them, thoroughly watering the roots, but not splashing the leaves or flowers.

In a very dry time there are scarcely any plants but what are benefited by the watering. The great trouble is that a watering often means nothing but a sprinkling of the surface. When you do water, give them a thorough soaking and hoe the next day. Dahlias particularly will want a frequent and thorough watering and should be mulched with two inches of manure. Next to watering the greatest help to keep your bed in good order is to keep all flowers, when they are past their best, picked off. Remember that going to seed is the most exhausting function of the plant. Not only should all flowers that are past their prime be picked off for tidiness' sake, but to keep up vigor in the plant. This applies to geraniums as much as anything.

Now is a very trying time for the azaleas, acacias, metrosideros and other hardwood plants that are plunged out of doors. They will dry out oftener than once a day and as they are growing they should never want for water. In a week or two, or even now, it will help them very much to slightly stir up the surface of the soil, then make a mulch of rotten manure with about half sheep are entirely in place, and if you do plant them take care of them. There is a great mistake made in the shape that hedges are too often kept. You see them as broad, or even broader at the top than at the bottom, keeping the sun and rains from the lower parts, which become bare and unsightly and then the hedge is simply an abomination and makes so many people disgusted with any hedge. They must be conical; broad at the base and tapering to the top. This is hard to do with a hedge that has been long neglected, but a good deal can be done towards that end. Don't be impatient to get a height to your hedge too soon. It must go slow. Fill up the lower parts before you attain height. The shears may do on hedges that have reached all the size you want, but I much prefer the pruning knife at all times, particularly on young hedges. The shears make a Norway spruce, hemlock or arbor vite hedge look like a poor man who has just done time.

SPANISH IRIS.

The accompanying photograph of a bed of Spanish iris is one of a dozen which flowered recently at the Pan-American. About one-third of the bulbs failed to flower. This we believe was entirely because they were planted so very late. The bulbs not arriving in this country they were not planted in the ground until very near the end of November and a very hard frost occurred short-manure to which has been added a liberal amount of bone dust, and put an inch of this on the surface. This will prevent them from drying out and will greatly benefit the plants.

Hedges.

If any of your customers ask you to prune their hedges just now or shorten back their evergreens, do it. It is a good time. It is a mistake to think that this should only be done in the early spring. They have made their growth and now can be trimmed back more or less as taste dictates. I am not an advocate of hedges, but there are places such as line fences where they ly afterwards. We believe they should be planted if possible by the middle of October, when they will get well rooted before hard winter sets in. They made a beautiful display. The colors were white, yellow and blue.

There is no handsomer spring flower. The bulbs are very inexpensive and quite small, not larger than a crocus bulb. They are beautiful in form, fantastic and orchid like in shape, and the colors desirable. It seems to me that large quantities of these should be planted by all commercial florists who do a cut flower business, being much prettier for cut flowers than either tulips or hyacinths. They are absolutely larly as was proven by us last winter, being planted very late and in wet soil and succeeded by a very hard winter.

They flowered with us from the middle to the 20th of June, making it rather late to be succeeded by other summer flowering plants, but we believe if planted earlier they would have flowered earlier, or about the first week of June. I think when better known this beautiful flower will be grown most extensively, for as cut flowers they are a great acquisition. The bulbs were sent as an exhibit by Cline & Boddington, of New York. CARNATION NOTES.

Housing Carnations.

Many of us like to begin housing our carnations by the later part of this month and preparations should be gotten under way at once. Few of the old plants are worth keeping any longer, and it will pay much better to throw them out at once and get the benches ready to receive the young plants from the field. Sometimes a bench is producing a good many blooms about this time and one hates to throw them out just when they are in crop. We have several times waited until the crop was off, but we were always sorry afterward that we did not sacrifice the few dollars the blooms brought in and throw them out earlier. We have always believed in early planting and each year we plant a few days earlier than we did the year before, and we find it pays.

What a difference there is between our methods of today and those of only a few years ago. The first of September was considered early and many growers did not care to plant before there was danger of hard frost, because, you know, the carnation is a half-hardy plant, and a few degrees of frost do not injure it, apparently. No wonder that good carnation blooms were not to be had until toward spring. Even now you will occasionally find an old fogey who will not dare to plant his carnations before it gets cool in the fall, because seeing that they wilt, even then, he imagines that they would surely die if they were lifted during the hot summer weather, when really they do not suffer nearly so much. The plants do not grow very much during July and August and consequently they are well matured and I might say about half dormant, and the lifting does not cause them to suffer.

But in September, when the nights are cool and the dews are heavy, the growth is rapid and the grass is sappy and tender and the least disturbance of the roots will cause arrest in the flow of the sap and the growth wilts. If the weather happens to be quite warm as is often the case in September a good many plants are lost and those that live take a long time to recover. Another advantage in early planting is that the plants become thoroughly established before the dark days of winter set in and they are in better condition to withstand a siege of adverse weather conditions. It is much better for them to make their main growth inside where they are to remain all winter.

The first crop of blooms, which on late lifted plants comes about in November is never of much account, while if the plants are housed by August 15th they will be producing fine blooms by that time, and the very best of carnations can be had by Christmas. The reason is that the shoots producing the blooms started and grew uninterruptedly from start to finish, while if the shoots start outside they get just enough check during the transplanting to spoil the quality of the bloom. Don't imagine that the bud has to show before you can injure the bloom which is to follow. Long before it shows the bud is away down in the base of the shoot, and with every pair of blades it comes nearer to the end, until at last it makes its appearance at the end of the shoot, and while it is yet way down in the shoot it can be injured by any check the plant may be subjected to.

Varieties.

What varieties to plant earliest is a question you must decide for yourself. If you want them all to come into crop at nearly the same time you should plant the slow growers (or late bloomers) first; but if you want good blooms as early as possible (like we do) you should plant the early bloomers first and follow with the others as soon as possible, so as to get them all in by August 20th.

Using Manure in the Benches.

There seems to be a great difference in opinion as to whether it is advisable to put any manure on the bottom of the bench before hauling in the soil. Some growers could not be persuaded to do so, while many others always do. We always put about one inch of well rotted cow manure on the bottom, but be sure it is well rotted. Fresh manure should never be used for this. Just as fine carnations are grown without this bottom layer of manure, but we find it saves a good deal of feeding during the winter, and if good judgment is exercised there is no danger in it. Four inches of soil and manure is plenty, and see that the soil is well pulverized, as carnations do not like rough, lumpy soil to grow in. Fresh soil is not to their liking either.

Add about 100 pounds of bone meal to 1,000 square feet of bench surface and rake it into the soil well.

If the soil is dry, water it the evening before you wish to plant. It should be just about as moist as you like to have it for potting, i. e., not wet enough to cake, but moist enough to keep the roots fresh until you water them. Nothing will hurt a carnation more than to be set into dry soil and left without water for an hour or two. Do not lift the plants when the ground is dry, but wait for a rain and then dig as soon as the ground is fit. There are several reasons for this. The ground is more mellow and the roots are not torn so much in the lifting, and then, too, there is usually cooler weather for a week or so, which gives the plants a good chance to recover quickly. Last year several growers around here lifted their plants during a dry, hot spell, and their blooms were poor all winter and some of the benches looked like hay fields a few weeks after they were planted.

Shading.

We shade the houses some while planting and leave it on about a week or ten days, just long enough so you can see that good root action has set in. The first good rain takes it off, as we use only clay and water for this shade. There should be no shade of any kind on the houses after the plants begin to grow again.

The distance between the plants must depend altogether on the varieties and the size of the plants. We find 10 to 12 inches each way a very good distance for most varieties. Plant just as deep as the plants were out in the field. Planting too deep is one of the most frequent causes of stem rot. Leave a small shallow place around the plant to hold water and after you finish planting fill this hole with water instead of watering the bed all over, like many growers do. Syringe overhead a few times each day and keep the walks damp until growth commences and then water more freely at the roots. Let only experienced men do the digging and the planting, as much depends on the selection of the plants as well as on the proper planting.

It takes a practiced eye to select the best plants, and nothing but the very best plants should be housed at all, because if you start with poor plants, where are you likely to land by mid-winter? We like to lift with a small ball of earth about the size of your fist, but if the soil is mellow and moist there is no harm done if it all drops off. Transfer them as quickly as possible, as nothing hurts carnations more than to have the roots dry out, and they do dry out in a very short time, if exposed to the air. A. F. J. BATR.

CHRYSANTHEMUM NOTES.

Pot Plants.

Specimen plants should have their last potting this month and don't let them get pot bound before you attend to the work. The soil for this potting should be well enriched, a good proportion being two parts of fibrous loam to one of well rotted manure, and a nice sprinkle of bone meal or Clay's fertilizer added.

Don't use pots that are too large to correspond well with the size of the plants: a large plant in a comparatively small pot would score many points more in a competition than the same sized plant in a larger pot, because it shows a higher degree of cultural skill.

One point is imperative and that is, have your pots well drained. If the drainage gets choked up when you are feeding with liquid manure later on, the soil will of course get sour, and the delicate root hairs of the plant will rot. Then the leaves will turn pale and sickly and a well finished plant will be out of the question.

With the hurry up methods in vogue in so many establishments the importance of proper drainage of the pots in which special subjects like specimen mums are grown is too often overlooked.

In potting ample room should be left on top of the pot for a mulch to be applied later on, when it can be seen that the plants are ready for it, which will be in three weeks or so after potting.

Wire, or thin bamboo stakes, should be put into the pots where needed to draw the main shoots into their proper position, then when pinching is discontinued the shoots will come away straight without any further twisting into position.

Keep all the shoots closely stopped until the end of this month, after which time pinching must cease or the flowers will come small and poorly finished.

Bed of Crimson Rambler Roses at the Pan-American Exposition.

Don't forget to pot up your single stem pot plants into 6-inch pots as soon as they are ready. The soil should be of the same degree of richness as for the specimen plants. Merza makes a fine pot plant, being dwarf and compact in habit. As a cut flower it is not a success, however, because of the unfortunate habit it has of wilting so quickly after cutting. Why this is I cannot say definitely but I assume it is because the stem gets so hard and woody that the water cannot pass up through the cells to supply the flower with the water it necessarily loses by evaporation.

Bench Plants.

Some of the bench plants are now producing buds and when this occurs rub off the bud and let the plant break away naturally. This it will do at once and when the shoots are long enough for you to see that they are not blind take off all the superfluous ones to throw the strength and energy of the plants into the shoots you wish to retain.

Some varieties exhibit a disposition to produce blind shoots after throwing a bud and these kinds should not be disbudded closely until you are certain that the shoots retained are perfect. Of such varieties I might mention Madam Carnot, Yellow Carnot, Frank Hardy, and Golden Wedding as being among the worst offenders with me.

BED OF CRIMSON RAMBLERS.

The bed of Crimson Rambler roses at the Pan-American Exposition, shown in the accompanying picture, covers an area of 1,300 square feet, and this bed, as are all the other rose beds, is on the top of four feet of loose clay dumped there about a year ago last June from the excavations of Mirror Lakes. We owe much of the success of these roses to the quality of the soil, which is a heavy clay loam, well enriched with manure. About 500 plants were received as late as the 8th of June; dormant plants, evidently from a root house, for they were very much dried up and I had little hopes of making them break satisfactorily. They were cut down, all except a few standards, to actually within an inch of the ground. By copious watering, which there was no fear of overdoing, and repeated hoeing, they were at last induced to break. Then they were given a mulch of two inches of rotten manure. The watering was kept up until the end of August, after which we had sufficient rains.

At the approach of severe winter the canes were all pegged down close to the ground, the standards bent down, and the whole covered with six inches of hemlock boughs. I am a great believer in hemlock as a covering for many things, it being far better than straw, and although these canes were very green and succulent almost up to winter there was not a twig lost. As soon as practicable this spring, by the aid of a lot of half inch iron rods, the canes were tied; some horizontally, some in the shape of a bow, and others straight up, which gave the bed a more pleasing appearance. I have never seen such large trusses nor individual flowers. It was a grand sight on the 4th of July. The picture was taken on the 3d, and by careful estimate we found it contained 300,000 flowers.

PRIVET—EELWORMS.

Replying to the inquiries of J. R. privet hedges may be clipped as frequently as once a month without harm. There is no known remedy for eel-worms in roses. The best thing to do is to throw out the affected plants and the soil they are growing in and start again with healthy plants and fresh soil. The diseased plants should be burned, to prevent possible infection from them.

CHICAGO TO BUFFALO.

The Chicago Florists' Club transportation committee has arranged with the Wabash railway for transportation to the Buffalo convention of the Society of American Florists, Aug. 6 to 10.

The party will leave Monday, Aug. 5, exact hour yet to be determined, and reach Buffalo Tuesday morning. The committee expects to have an unusually well appointed special train. The rate will be $13.00 for the round trip, and less should there be any cut in rates by the railroads for that week. The sleeping car fare will be $3.00 a berth each way. An excellent dining car service is assured.

Florists in the west and northwest are cordially invited to travel with the Chicago party.

Berths may be reserved by addressing any member of the committee as below.

G. L. GRAY,

P. J. HATSWORTH,
223 Michigan Ave.
E. F. WINTERTON,
45 Wabash Ave.

As a number of those intending to go to Buffalo have expressed a wish to start Monday instead of Sunday the transportation committee of the Chicago Florists' Club has decided to have the club's special train leave on Monday, Aug. 5, instead of Sunday, Aug. 4, as previously announced. The train will reach Buffalo early the morning of Tuesday, Aug. 6, giving members of the party ample time to secure hotel accommodations and then reach the convention hall in time for the opening session.

BAY TREES.

The accompanying view at the Pan-American Exposition, showing the Charleston Race, with the Horticulture building in the background, is just inside the Elmwood entrance. The view taken is a circular plot and surrounding the statuary are four large pyramid bays and four standard bays, with a few smaller evergreens near the base of the statuary; also eight very fine hydrangeas. The tubs of all these plants are sunk 'in the ground and they have the appearance of being planted out. It is a very striking and pleasing group and the first thing you see entering the gates.

WM. SCOTT.

THE PAST CENTURY.

THE DAHLIA.

The close of the century saw the dahlia also very popular. A series of colored illustrations, dating back over seventy years, enables one to realize something of the gradual changes which converted a single flower into a double one. The large show and fancy varieties are still widely cultivated, especially for exhibition purposes; and the pompon varieties have been greatly extended and improved during the last thirty years. About thirty years ago the single-flowered type came to the fore, and numberless new varieties were obtained; they were very popular for a few years, but of late have much declined in the popular estimation. In 1880, Dahlia Juncuzzi—the cactus dahlia—was introduced, and its progeny now form the most popular of all the sections. From the crimson flower first introduced there have come a large number of varieties of many shades and combinations of colors, all retaining the cactus form of the original introduction, and indeed, showing improvements upon it. While the flowers have undergone great improvements, there are yet material defects of habit in many of the newer introductions.

THE HOLLYHOCK.

The hollyhock, of which there were about nine varieties, mainly double, in 1820, was improved by Charles Barno sixty years ago, and later by Paul, Chater, Bireham, Parsons, Rooke and others, until it had attained to great pre-eminence as an exhibition flower. Then about forty years ago came the outbreak of a fungous disease, which decimated collections and caused the total loss of not a few of the finest varieties then cultivated. Of late years the disease, having become less virulent, attempts are being made to restore the hollyhock to something of its old position in the estimation of florists. The single-flowered varieties are also receiving attention as border plants, but their value as decorative agents is in danger of being over-estimated.

THE PANSY.

The old show pansies, the selfs and white and yellow grounds, are now grown but little in the south, though they find favor in the north. The fancy pansy, originated by John Salter, and so much improved by M. Milliez nearly fifty years ago, with their larger, richly colored blossoms and more vigorous growth, are much preferred, and occupy a prominent place in many gardens. Fifty years ago pansy shows were numerous; now the flower does not often find a place in schedules of prizes. The viola, an outcome of the last half century, is now represented by a multitude of varieties, to which additions are being made annually, many of them, it is feared, of inferior character. They are esteemed for flower garden purposes, and in our London parks some of the varieties are seen to great advantage. Unfortunately, comparatively few of the named varieties appear capable of enduring the heat and drought of our recent summers.

THE PELARGONIUM.

The show and fancy pelargoniums, which fifty years ago, Beck, Hoyle, Foster, Gaines, Dobson, Foquette, Ambrose and others, did so much to improve, and Turner later in point of time, have ceased to be regarded with so much favor as greenhouse decorative plants as former ly; and yet they are not difficult to cultivate, and they are singularly showy when in bloom. A section known as large-flowered decorative varieties supply several which are largely grown as market plants; but the show and fancy pelargoniums, once cultivated into fine and imposing specimens for exhibition purposes, are now very rarely seen in this form. The zonal type holds its own as a bedding plant for summer, and as a house decorative plant in the season, and especially for flowering under glass in autumn and winter. The name of Pearson is prominently associated with the improvement of the zonal type for over thirty years; much of the reëment seen in the present day is due to the good work done at the Chiswell Nurseries. From other home sources, and also from abroad, have come many new and novel varieties; and this activity goes to emphasize the fact that the zonal pelargonium has lost none of its old popularity.

With the decline of the riband sty'e of flower gardening came also a lessening of interest in the variegated and bronzed types, and it is certain that they have materially declined in cultivation. New varieties are now very rare indeed.

Bay Trees at the Pan-American Exposition. Horticultural Building in the Background.

The ivy-leaved type and its offspring still enjoy a good deal of popularity, because of their usefulness as decorative plants. The scented-leaved specimens and their varieties are still cared for in places, but it cannot be said they are at present popular plants.

THE PÆONY.

The tree pæonies (P. Montan), which came from China in 1789, are also a product of the present century, and the varieties have greatly increased during the past few years, both at home and abroad. Like the Chrysanthemum, it is a favorite flower with the Chinese and Japanese gardeners. The remote progenitors of the herbaceous type, P. albiflora and P. officinalis, have been in English gardens for over three hundred years, but it is only during the last half of the nineteenth century that there has been activity in the production of new varieties, and these appear every year in apparently increasing quantities. Whether grown under glass or in the open, the flowers, which in the case of many varieties are fully doubled, are also surprisingly fine.

THE PENTSTEMON.

The pentstemon is a very popular garden plant; one of its most valuable characteristics is that of blooming to quite late in the year. P. Cobaea and P. Hartwegi, from which the present fine varieties found in cultivation are believed to have sprung, were introduced since 1820, and thus the development of the flower belongs to the century just closed. An introduction from Mexico, under the name of P. gentianoides, was popular in gardens over fifty years ago, and this no doubt proved to be another valuable parent. Our present-day strains of pentstemons are now remarkable for the great size and rich colors of the flowers, so much so, that naming is but little resorted to except in Scotland.

THE PETUNIA.

The finely-formed, striped petunias, which ranked as florists' flowers thirty and forty years ago, have largely disappeared, and in their place we have very large blooms of gaudy colors, but showing a great lack of shape and substance. There was no petunia in cultivation in this country during the first twenty years of the nineteenth century, but when P. violacea and P. nyctaginiflora were introduced, material was supplied from which flowers of high quality and beautifully striped characters were derived. We look back with something like regret upon the named varieties of petunias of thirty and forty years ago. There are a great many double varieties also, and some of them make very useful decorative and market plants. The petunia serves so many useful purposes that it is likely to retain its place in gardens for many years to come.

THE ROSE.

It would require a large volume to do justice to the rose. There was in cultivation at the commencement of the century a very large group of what might be termed garden roses; but we can scarcely be said to have any hybrid perpetual varieties until after 1830, and from 1850 they were improved with remarkable success. The race of tea-scented roses may be said to have begun about much the same time. The hybrid teas began with Cheshunt Hybrid, La France, and Captain Christy, some thirty or so years ago; and Bennett did much to improve the race, assisted by continental raisers. Not a few interesting forms of roses have been introduced from Japan and elsewhere, such as R. polyantha, Rosa rugosa, and its allies, etc. Garden roses are now highly popular, on account of the variety of form and color, and wealth of bloom found in the section. The banksian and moss roses have lost much of their old popularity, but the China roses still rank high as autumn bloomers. As an exhibition subject, the rose is as popular as ever; but the giant specimen plants which were grown and exhibited a quarter of a century ago appear to have entirely disappeared. In a modern rose garden can now be found a considerable proportion of those denominated garden roses.

BOSTON.

Trade Conditions.

Another week has fluttered gayly by! Not heavily laden with floral business, but giving much time for reflection, philosophic research and moral discipline.

Does our summer trade increase as fast year by year as the winter trade increases? I think not, and am at a bit of loss to wholly account for it. The great increase of the vacation custom may explain a large part of it, since a much heavier percentage of the purchasing class goes away for the summer than formerly. But we never looked for much but funeral work during two or three of the hottest months and the stern old specter, with the hour-glass and "with his sickle keen," never takes a vacation, so why should not the summer business increase more rapidly?

Goods are plentiful enough and cheap enough. Much of an outdoor nature has been coming in this week, such as sweet peas, candytuft, achillea, gypsophila, feverfew, lamifolium lilies, etc. Several small lots of asters also have dropped in casually to inquire how things are going. I hear whispers of a shortage in the main crop of asters, however.

The general cut of glass-grown crops is now fairly good, thanks to cooler weather for the past ten days. But pinks have hard work beating $1 per 100 very much and ordinary roses have to look pretty sharp to catch 4 cents, some large Kaiserins perhaps reaching a bill per dozen. Not many red ones floating around, and not so very much call for them.

Various Items.

Calvin's old store on Tremont street is being treated to a fine, hard pine floor of best quality, to be covered with an equal grade of linoleum, and this will be followed by elegant new fixtures throughout, taking a month or more for completion of the entire work.

Workmen have excavated a hole forty feet deep under the site of the old horticultural hall. They probably ceased finding any of the money at that depth that Larry dropped through the cracks in the floor at Sutherland's before he got those new specs.

Consider now the trials and vexations of the rose growers, especially if he be one of the many who had poor success all last winter. Anything like real hunger for his goods has disappeared and he sees no release from his predicament for a long time to come. They will rub asters into him now for three months, till he can't see in one eye, and then they will lash him with chrysanthemums till he cannot see with the other eye. Who can blame him at Christmas when all this is over, for solidly planting both feet and striking at every head that shows up on his limited horizon! The only time he can wear spectacles at his belt is from Christmas to July 4.

Several members of the gang have accepted the offer of the Society of Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and gone to their office on Milk street for a straw hat for horses. Will this fashion be followed by a tall hat, gold headed cane, white collar and spectacles for Sundays and holidays? J. S. MANTER.

SOME BUFFALO PRIZES.

The accompanying engravings are from photographs of the cup and vase, offered by the Buffalo Florists' Club as prizes for the best exhibit of plants and cut flowers respectively, at the coming trade exhibition. These cups are silver, gold lined, finely moulded and ornamented, and stand 8 and 22 inches high respectively. They also are suitably engraved.

Regarding the trade exhibition Superintendent Keitsch reports that he has already 34 orders for space with an aggregate of about 5,000 square feet. A goodly number of negotiations are pending and he thinks that by the time the doors are open there will be 100 or more exhibitors and a proportionately large amount of space covered with florists' merchandise.

For information about space, etc., address Chas. H. Keitsch, 270 Southampton St., Buffalo, N. Y.

ST. LOUIS.

Club Meeting.

The July meeting of the Florists' Club was held Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock and was fairly well attended, there being fourteen present. The meeting was called to order by President Guy. The exhibition committee reported that everything was going on nicely for the fall exhibition. Chairman Meinhardt also stated that, to the committee, the Odeon on Grand avenue was the most satisfactory place in which to hold the next show.

The transportation committee reported that the best possible rate to Buffalo is $19.25 for the round trip. The club will hold a special meeting on Thursday, Aug. 1, and all arrangements for the trip will be made at that meeting.

The report of the trustees as to the outing was that the picnic would be held at Preister's Park and that there would be music, dancing, boating, bowling and sports of all kinds. Everybody in the trade and their friends are invited to attend. Everything will be free. Thursday, July 18, is the date.

A vote of thanks was extended to the Belleville florists for their hospitality to us at our last meeting held in their city.

This being the regular meeting for the nomination of officers for the ensuing year the following names were proposed for the various offices: For president, Fred Meinhardt, Charles A. Juengel and F. J. Fillmore; for vice president, F. M. Ellis and George Windler; for secretary, Emil Schray; for treasurer, C. C. Sanders and J. J. Bencke; for trustees, Fred Ammann, Mr. Scott, Hy Emundt, E. W. Guy, Dr. Halsted and R. J. Mohr. The election will be held at the next meeting of the club, Aug. 1, at 3 o'clock.

The Market.

The past week was a very dull one and nothing to speak of is going on. It is perhaps a good thing there is so little business doing as the stock of flowers just now is very poor and scarce. The intense heat of the past two weeks has almost finished roses and carnations and the outside stuff sent in is scarcely saleable. The best of the roses bring $4 and from that down to $1; carnations, 50 and 75 cents; a few fancy, $1 and $1.50. The outdoor stock, such as sweet peas, asters and gladioli, in addition to the heat has had to contend with a long spell of rainless weather and has suffered extremely in quality.

The carnation plants outside look very well notwithstanding the unfavorable conditions and most of the growers are exceedingly happy just now.

Notes.

J. D. Carnody of Evansville, Ind., was a visitor the past week. He is looking as well as ever.

Fred Ammann, Edwardsville, Ill.; E. W. Guy, Dr. Halsted and Hy Emundt, of Belleville, Ill., were here calling on the trade the past week.

Charlie Kuehn will by the end of the present week be through with the work of remodeling his place. The wire shop is snugly settled on the third floor, with Willie Holtz in charge. The ground floor with cut flowers and supplies will be in the charge of George and Eddie, the old relatives.

Frank M. Ellis has put in a new show case for his supplies. Frank, with the assistance of "Whitt," is brushing up the place so as to be in good shape for the fall trade.

Henry Berning is also making some improvements at his place which will be ready in a few weeks for the fall trade with J. W. Kunz and Otto in charge.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower market is quiet now. Not many good flowers are coming to town; nearly all that do come find ready sale at fair prices for midsummer. Funeral orders are still plentiful, creating a demand for white flowers. Roses are worth from $5 per 100 down; carnations, 50 to 75 cents per 100; a few bring $1. Sweet peas are nearly over; 25 to 30 cents per 100 is the prevailing price. Hollyhocks are found useful for design work; they sell at $1 per 100.

The most profitable plant today is Begonia Gloire de Lorraine. This novelty of three years ago, graphically described as "a begonia that is a begonia," is having a great run. It was thought that little plants from thumb pots would be cheap this season; on the contrary, the price has been advancing. Edwin Lonsdale has a fine stock of this plant. He is now very busy propagating it.

Various Items.

Leo Niessen is receiving some excellent Brides and Maids from James Verner, well known as former head-gardener to the late A. J. Drexel. Some very good lily of the valley is also coming in to this commission merchant.

George Anderson is cutting excellent Carnot roses, which bring $3 to $4 per 100 and are in good demand.

Charles B. Stahl is growing on his own account at Collingdale. He has as good sweet peas as can be seen in town and will have asters shortly. This is a new departure for a commission man and one that will fill in the time to advantage in the dull season.

O. Ross, Fifth and Butler streets, who for many years supplied some of our florists with sod and wire frames, is dead.

Robert Craig & Son have planted more chrysanthemums than last season. They have just benched one large and several medium sized houses with nice stuff from small pots. The varieties grown are: White, Timothy Eaton, the great prize winning Canadian novelty of last season, Merza and Ivory; yellow, Gold Mine and Golden Beauty; red, Xeno; pink, Maud Dean. All of these are comparatively new sorts excepting Ivory and Maud Dean.

A very interesting house here is the one filled with lilies in 6-inch pots. They are Lilium tenuifolium alba and rubra and L. auratum, the latter in several types. The plants are full of half developed buds which promise a fine crop. These lilies are started outside late in the winter in pots covered with litter; when brought inside after Easter they are well rooted, ready for active growth. They have attained a height of six feet. Some of the auratums have a dozen blooms. These are cut with short stems and make a very desirable flower for making up, especially in wreaths. Besides the staple foliage plants there are some striking fancy caladiums and crotons, new varieties on trial; a very fine lot of pedestal grown Boston fern in 16-inch pans was another feature; 2,000 Cycas revoluta in active growth were an indication of the changes through which we are constantly passing.

All the wholesalers will close at 1 p. m. every Saturday from now until August 31.

John Westcott's guests at Waretown unite in describing the "Commodore" as a royal entertainer.

To our bowling team—
True, but not new:

"You may hunt the world all over
As carefully as you please,
But in spite of all you trouble,
You will find no men like these.
There is wit and wisdom, talent and fun,
Good and evil in every one.
They can crack a joke, sing a song
And tell tall lies when the games seem long.
They can loudly laugh at anything queer
And all but kill or fuzzle beer.
When critics gibe they gibe in return,
Many a maiden's heart will burn
When she sees the air of easy grace
And the genial smile on Moss' face.
They are all good feeders, can all "eat pie,"
As the other teams will certify.
They are all heart breakers if not heart whole.
You bet-cher-boots they all can bow!"

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Average conditions have changed but little from last week though there have been various ups and downs in both supply and demand. Last Friday the market was as bare of flowers as it could be. Probably there were fewer flowers on the market that day than ever before during the last dozen years. This was due not alone to the throwing out and replanting of houses, but to the several sudden shifts in temperature from hot to cool and back again to hotter. Wednesday of last week the thermometer reached 102 at 3 p. m. and by 8 p. m. it had fallen to nearly 60. Since then the average has been nearer to 75 and the plants have recovered somewhat, though very poor stock is the rule. Local demand is apparently quite dead, but there is a fair sprinkling of shipping orders, enough to take all stock that will come anywhere near fair grade.

Anything really fair in roses will bring $4 to $5, while in carnations 30 cents to $1 is asked for average run and 75 cents to $1.50 for good to best white. On Monday sales were good, the retailers having to stock up a little, but on Tuesday there was a relapse, though with no surplus worth mentioning.

The heavy rains that generally accompanied the changes from equatorial heat to cooler weather practically cut out the supply of sweet peas for awhile, but the plants have evidently recovered somewhat, as fair flowers are much in evidence. The price is $1 to $1.50 per 1,000. A few hollyhocks are appearing in the market.

Various Items.

Bassett & Washburn have purchased the greenhouses of the Hinsdale Rose Company, Hinsdale, Ill., and after re-voiding them will combine with their other glass. The new acquisition contains about 100,000 square feet of glass, and makes their entire plant aggregate about fifteen acres under glass. In the range now added there are twenty-six houses, and after they have been rebuilt sixteen of them will be planted with carnations, and the remaining ten will be used for growing small plants, mainly roses. The three new houses being built by this firm are now nearly finished. They are all large houses, the three containing 50,000 square feet, and will be devoted to roses and smilax. Mr. Bassett believes more than ever in large houses and says that no new house will be less than 30x600, and were he to rebuild his older plant he would have no house smaller than the size noted.

C. W. McKellar and Walter Heffron left Wednesday for a two-weeks' fishing and hunting trip during which they will visit various points on and adjacent to Lake Michigan and other lakes. A complete printed list of the guns, fishing tackle and other gear taken along will be sent to inquirers on receipt of $1 to prepay express charges.

Mr. George F. Crabb, of Crabb & Hunter, Grand Rapids, Mich., was a visitor this week. He took home with him a new foreman in the person of Mr. Charles Duerr, formerly of Park Ridge.

Mr. and Mrs. William Winterson are still at Tacoma, Wash. Their son John, who was so seriously injured in a railroad accident, has recovered sufficiently so that he can now be lifted into a hospital chair, though still unable to leave the hospital.

Mr. E. F. Pieser, of Kennicott Bros. Co., starts Friday or Saturday on his annual summer trip. His first stop will be at West Baden, Ind.

The chimney at the greenhouses of George Harrer at Niles Center was struck by lightning July 4 and considerable damage resulted.

Mr. H. McMichaels, of the Morton Grove Greenhouses, is spending a week's vacation in Iowa.

A regular meeting of the Florists' Club will be held tomorrow (Friday) evening at 40 Randolph street. This will be the last regular meeting until the fall season.

Mr. C. A. Samelson has built a handsome conservatory 24x60 at the rear of his store and the interior of the store is being entirely refinished in solid mahogany. It will be a remarkably rich and artistic interior.

Some additions are being made to the store of Mr. E. Wienhoeber and both store and conservatory are being freshly painted and decorated.

Bowling.

The four games that completed the bowling tournament were played last Tuesday evening. The Growers won one from the Wholesalers and three from the Seedsmen, and the Wholesalers took two from the Retailers and the latter one from the wholesalers and one from the Seedsmen. The result of the tournament is to give the Wholesalers first place and the Growers second, Retailers third and Seedsmen fourth. The Wholesalers take the first prize of $7.00 and the Growers the second prize of $5.00. The John A. Evans prize, a fine bowling ball, goes to Jos. Foerster for highest average. Twelve of the dollar prizes for score of 200 or more, offered by G. L. Grant, were won during the tournament. It has not yet been announced who won the box of cigars offered by Geo. Asmus to the one making the greatest number of spares. The five shirts offered by E. F. Winterson are to go to the five highest men in the final roll off. This is to be 10 games by the 12 highest men in the tournament just closed and the six highest 10 in this are to compose the Buffalo team. The first five of these games are to be played this Thursday evening and the remaining five probably next Tuesday.

Following are the final scores in the tournament:

BUFFALO.

Business has been good for this usually dull time. The Exposition must account for that. It is rather difficult now to cut good carnations or roses. Sweet peas are at their best, and Lilium lancifolium are coming in, which is a change for some purposes.

The last meeting of the Florists' Club was small, but very earnest and the active heads did a great deal of important business. We have received by this morning's mail from Secretary Stewart a program of the Buffalo convention, and it reads well. To those who may not receive one I will say that the entertainment part of it consists of a carriage ride round the city and park in the afternoon on the first day, for the ladies, and incidentally some refreshments. It will be strictly confined to ladies and men who are known to be especially ladies' men. Such types of that sort as John Esler, J. D. Carmody, William R. Smith and Warren Ewell. The president's reception in the evening. Thursday afternoon the shooters will have the r innings and on Friday a special train of forty-two cars will take the bunch to the Falls of Niagara. We had considerable difference of opinion about this trip, but I believe we have decided wisely. Who will come to Buffalo from any distance without visiting this great wonder? For it is like the other good and great things on earth, it improves with acquaintance, and those who have never seen it must see it.

On Saturday the bowlers will have the whole day. In addition to the several valuable fine cups to be fought for, there is the Pierson cup for the highest individual aggregate score, and besides that half a dozen other valuable prizes, to be distributed for those rolling up in spares, strikes and high scores in first, second and third games. There are also two fine prizes for high scores in shooting, besides the team shoot.

I intend to tell your readers before they start for Buffalo a little about the Midway. It is the greatest "whatever was" and there are shows and shows. Perhaps instead of publishing this it would be wiser to give the program to William J. Craig, as he could be entrusted to be a good chaperon and avoid all that was not strictly proper.

We are sorry to see our friend Mr. C. E. Christensen laid up with a bad attack of rheumatism. We hope he will be round again in time to show his genial self to the visitors. I want to take this opportunity to say that our friends visiting the Exposition city either during the convention week or any other time should be sure and give a deaf ear to any agents that may accost you on the train or at the depots. They are the agents of most undesirable

Various Items.

There was very little doing among the florists during the past week and what little there was gave the craft more trouble than all the winter's business put together. This is due to the scarcity of suitable stock. Most of the carnation growers are throwing out the old plants and cleaning up their houses for fall planting. Wm. Murphy made his last cut last Saturday and George Murphy has thrown out everything save white, which are in fine demand and bring a good price.

It is a wonder that more florists do not make arrangements to have some white carnations to cut at this time of year. There is always a demand for them and prices obtained make them decidedly profitable.

Tuberoses are beginning to come in now and asters will be coming about the last of this week. They will be more than welcome as they will in some respects take the place of carnations. The aster bugs have been at work at some places and these together with the scorching weather have made some aster beds look pretty sick.

The hot weather still continues, with no relief in sight. It is now some three weeks since we have had a good rain and the ground is baked hard. The country roads are thick with dust and it is anything but a pleasure to have to travel over them. The water supply at several establishments is beginning to give out and the job of hauling water is not to be sought after.

Letters have been received from a good many out-of-town florists stating their intention of attending the S. A. F. O. H. convention at Buffalo. Some are already on the way; but they intend to make short visits to some of the lake cities before arriving at Buffalo.

The florists' outing takes place on Thursday, the 18th. Some nice prizes are entered for the different events and a general good time is expected.

Mrs. Mary Schwab, one of the oldest of the women florists of this city, died on Thursday of the past week, of dropsy. She was sixty years old and had been in the florist business for twenty-one years. She operated two stores, one on Vine street and the other on a twelfth street. The Vine street establishment she recently sold to Mrs. Thomas, but the Twelfth street place she was still running at the time of her death. She leaves five girls and one boy to whom the sympathy of the craft is extended. The funeral took place Saturday morning.

Recent visitors to this city are Mr. John Evans, the ventilator man, and S. S. Skidelsky, of Philadelphia.

ST. PAUL.

The Twin City florists held their annual picnic at Wildwood, White Bear Lake, the loveliest water spot in the northwest. Messrs. Aug. Swanson, St. Paul; Hartman and Nagel, Minneapolis, composed the committee on arrangements. There were all kinds of sports, races, etc., and all enjoyed themselves greatly.

The honors of the races and ball-and-matches were about evenly divided and every one present was satisfied with results. The bowling contest had to be played at St. Paul as the alleys at Wildwood were under repair. Messrs. Will and Lindquist proved to be champions. Wildwood is a temperance place, but the boys managed to get several boxes of "Bohemian" out there, which was a great relief at 96 degrees above.

CHRIST. BUSSJAEGER.

PUTTY AND MASTICA.

In answer to the inquiry regarding the relative merits of putty and mastica for glazing, I would say that it is so many years since I have used putty in any form for glazing that I cannot give an intelligent answer, but in my opinion the cost would be about the same. I will say, however, that I do not favor mastica if you lap the glass, as you do not get it on thick enough where the glass is lapped. If I lapped the glass I would prefer a good quality of putty with about 1-10 of white lead mixed with it.

Mastica is a most valuable article to the florist, particularly those who have old houses. If run in between the wood and the glass it will stop up all cracks, thoroughly keeping out water. It is easily put on and I believe it would pay well to apply it every year. It makes a poorly glazed house water tight. I find it does not work in cool weather and is a little thin in the hottest weather. Moderately warm weather is about the best time to apply it.

WM. SCOTT.

We do not like mastica as well as putty for glazing. Mastica is sometimes useful for special work, but ordinarily putty is quicker and makes a nicer job.
JOHN WELSH YOUNG.

WELL PLEASED.

I am well pleased with the REVIEW.

A VALUABLE ASSISTANT.

I find the REVIEW a valuable assistant and an excellent advertising medium.—JOHN NORDBE, Florist for JEWELL NURSERY Co., Lake City, Minn.

A GOOD THING.

The classified ads. are a good thing. It is easy to find just what is wanted, and I think it is only a matter of a little time before people generally will realize this.—S. M. HARRISON, Danville, Ky.

THANKS FOR RESULTS.

Many thanks for results from had. Had to turn down many orders. Sold out so clean could supply only about one-half that the orders called for.—J. N. KIDB, St. Joseph, Mo.

FIVE TIMES AS MANY.

I spent $2 in the classified columns of the REVIEW and as a result sold five times as many plants as I did through $25 worth of advertising in another paper. This is experience that can't be gained.—G. P. MOORE, Ocean City, N. J.

BAMBOOS—GERANIUMS.

Please tell me the best method of keeping bamboo roots during winter. Also, why do the leaves of geranium plants turn brown after being bedded out in rather light soil, with a good supply of water and sunshine?
 A. B. C.

There are a good many species of bamboo, but I presume that the inquiry refers to those that are hardy. After the first hard frosts a covering of six inches of tan bark among the old canes and for a foot or more round the stool will usually protect all the hardy bamboos. If you cannot get tan bark, then stable litter or spent hops will do, but don't apply it until there has been a little frost in the ground.

There may be several reasons for the leaves of geraniums turning yellow. If geraniums have been kept in a close, shady house, then suddenly put out in a bed in the hot sun, they are sure to lose some leaves. Although one of the commonest and most easily managed plants the geranium has some peculiarities. Did you ever notice that if you left a flat full in the shed for forty-eight hours the leaves will turn yellow? If grown in a light house subject to the full sun and carefully watered when put out there will be no leaves turning brown. Perhaps the fault is a combination of both poor watering and the plants grown in a shaded house. If they are healthy plants they will soon get over this by one or two waterings and the ground stirred the next day. Pinch off all dead leaves and flowers until you see a good, healthy growth starting.
 W. S.

BOWLING GREEN, KY.—W. W. Hendrix has sold his place to Kelley & Lively, who will continue the business. Mr. Hendrix has removed to Georgia where he will start a new place to grow specialties.

NEW WABASH EQUIPMENT.

The Wabash Railroad has just received and placed in service on its lines running out of Chicago the following new equipment. Eight combination baggage and passenger coaches, thirty palace day coaches, ten reclining chair cars, three cafe cars and two dining cars. The majority of these new cars are seventy feet in length, and fitted with the latest style wide vestibules. They have six wheel trucks with steel wheels. The cars are finished in the finest selected Jago mahogany. The lighting is by Pintsch gas with the exception of the cafe, dining and some of the chair cars, which are unusually well lighted by electricity, the fixtures being especially designed for these cars. The dining cars will seat twenty-nine persons and have ample kitchen space. The cafe cars will seat eighteen persons in the cafe, and have a library and smoking room in the observation end of the car which will seat fourteen persons. These cars also contain a private cafe with seating capacity for eight persons. These new cars represent the highest stage of the development of modern car building. Nothing has been omitted and no expense spared that would add to their luxurious elegance, or to the comfort and convenience of the patrons of the Wabash road.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

The Summer Resorts.

This is what is commonly called harvest time for the florists at the summer resorts, and so far we have not heard a complaint about dullness. The prospect seems to be unusually good in all directions. Of course, there are a great many summer resorts where there is not sufficient trade to support a resident florist, and others where the returns would be much larger had the florist sufficient capital to develop possibilities. The summer trade, except in a few rare cases, is even more speculative than winter trade in the cities.

There are many ways to look at this section of the business. The plant trade done at these places is considerable, and could be vastly enlarged were more suitable materials offered at reasonable prices. In many places we note the existence of establishments which seem to have a starved out look about them, a direct and most powerful trade killer; greenhouses emptied of their stock of bedding plants seem to be deserted places.

Growers must not imagine that knowing how to grow a few coleus or geraniums, or even roses and carnations, constitutes the all in all of the requirements of today where a retail business is desired. People nowadays look for city styles everywhere, and there is disappointment if they cannot get what they want even in the most obscure place. There is scarcely a florist's place all along the Jersey coast today that appeals by its neatness or attractiveness to the passerby. How little it would require to make them so and how much even in self-satisfaction there is to be gained by it. We know of numerous small places that do a retail business where customers—refined ladies—are taken into the "office," a dirty potting shed with its unmentionable furnishings and surroundings, and made to witness the make-shifts for what ought to be. God only knows how some people get along; it's mysterious to say the least; perhaps they make a little more than if they were growing cabbage or corn, but they don't make as much as they could.

If the cause is incapacity and you know an extended business can be done, get up to the spirit and requirements of the times.

We recently visited Newport, R. I. It is a good place to study people and what pertains to the retail florist's trade. We would advise any aspirant to put a season in at Newport even if at a temporary loss. At the time of our visit (the first week of July) we saw finer stock than was then coming to the New York market. There are several local growers who are wideawake and there are many things seen at Newport that it would be well to emulate almost anywhere. We saw some new sweet peas at Gibson Bros. (if we remember right, they came from Burpee's) that deserve the highest praise.

Sweet peas are a popular flower at Newport, where they can often be seen to perfection, but not in as great variety as one would wish. The trouble with sweet pea growers is that there are one or two old varieties that have woven themselves into their hearts and no others can get a chance. There is no doubt about it, sweet peas are destined to be even more popular and serviceable than they are today, and more attention as to variety, or rather color and succession, will be paid to them when this is more fully understood. One of the greatest sights we have seen for a long time, and one that would gladden any old timer's heart, was the Marechal Niels at Mrs. Astor's. They were very handsome and accentuated the fact that it is still today the finest yellow rose in existence. Pity it is that they are not obtainable on the market. As to doubts about their value, pshaw, there are men in the retail business of the year. We know several large and prosperous establishments today that owe much of what is to the steamer flower trade of, say, fifteen years ago.

A most remarkable thing is that although every steamer going to Europe takes away her quota of flowers, the German boats are where the most flowers are seen. This does not imply that the Germans are the greatest lovers of flowers, for the boats are popular with all classes; still there are many that point most creditably to that race of people. We cannot help thinking that there is room to dispose of many bouquets and loose flowers on the docks on sailing days. Some enterprising people may cater to this trade some day. We leave everything to the Greek and then hollo because he succeeds.

A great change has come over steamer work. Once upon a time every kind of design could be seen in the saloons of the boat and anything could be used in stiff work. That's where it was profitable; but now it is mostly boxes of cut flowers and not infrequently we see tags and boxes from florists in Boston, Philadelphia and farther away places. This box business has its drawbacks from a local point of view; it is scarcely any use to send flowers if they are not seen in a case like this, because the effect is lost to a great extent.

Of course, it is handy to put flowers in ness in every city whose brain and tongue can make anything go. We intend to write about Newport styles next month and pass on for the present.

Steamer Trade.

In New York here the business can be likened to a balky horse. Steamer work has been very good this summer, in fact, much better than for the past five years. This is a good sign. Years ago it used to be for many the most profitable busia box; that requires no ability as things are generally done today, but it does require some pretense to tie a bunch and put a bit of ribbon on it, and there should be a general understanding among florists that the more flowers seen the more people will be induced to buy, therefore it is wise to tie up your steamer flowers even as a matter of convenience and greater pleasure to the receiver. People going away like to carry bunches of flowers about the deck with their friends, and loose flowers, as you know, have their drawbacks. A bow of ribbon is always in order on steamer flowers, for apart from such helping to be distinguishable out in the river as a last salute, they are often valued as souvenirs by the voyager.

The New York Market.

There has been and always is a great scarcity of flowers during July and August in New York. No amount of persuasion seems to be able to induce growers to supply that want. It is true that summer trade is believed to be uncertain, but the fact remains that there is a steady demand for any kind of good roses and sooner or later growers must awaken to that fact. At the present time, of course, Kaiserin is the best white rose we have, and the business could scarcely get along without it. They are selling all the way from 75 cents to $3 per dozen. A few fairly good Beauties are obtainable and the best bring $9 in the highest circles.

A most popular class of flowers this summer are the various colored centaureas; the blue corn flower is the ideal day boutonniere; they are tied very compact in order to keep longer and are not made as large as heretofore. This flower is also a favorite with the ladies, for whom they are also tied rather close together, the stems trimmed and one or two flowers hanging downwards.

Carnations are getting scarce, but there promises to be a great flood of them next season, so much so that many are of the opinion that last season's unprecedented prices will never again be realized. It is true that Lawson, Roosevelt and Prosperity will have ceased to be wonders by next winter, but the fact remains that there will always be a market for and good money returned for quality. Any one who can produce quality in any florist's necessity need not fear to spread himself.

Some very fine Cattleya Gigas are seen and it is a great pity we cannot get such magnificent blooms in winter. The demand for them now is only spasmodic. More of them could be used in such places as Newport, but the trouble is it is never safe to push them unless you have them in your ice-box. We all know to our sorrow how indifferent the grower and wholesalers are to the dreads and heart-breaking fears of the retailers when booking orders for such doubtful stock. All they need to do is to send word at the last moment that they cannot supply you, or if they do, they always raise the price.

We have never seen so many lilies on the market during summer before. They often prove a godsend and are always good for the principal trade, which is funeral work, during these hot days.

IVERA.

FUNERAL DESIGNS.

We present herewith engravings from photographs of two designs arranged by Mr. W. E. King, East Santa Cruz, Cal., for the funeral of the late F. Hageman, Esq., of that city.

The flowers used can be readily identified in the pictures, except The flowers in the star suspended from the round arch. The flowers in the base of this design are lily of the valley. The square arch was five feet high and the round arch with suspended star was a little higher.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Sweet Peas.

Seeing some wonderful sweet peas today reminds me that a hint to growers of these beautiful flowers would be to tell them how necessary it is in this very hot weather to keep them well watered. They should not only be soaked, at least twice a week, but they are very liable to be troubled with red spider so that in addition to watering they should be constantly syringed.

Another very important thing is not to allow them to go to seed. They will quickly go out of flower if the old flowers are allowed to remain on and bear seed. Keep them picked off even if you have no particular use for them.

Gladiolus.

Another important flower to use this time of year is the gladiolus. I am aware that there are a good many so situated that they cannot water their fields of gladiolus. More is the pity. It will help them wonderfully if you can irrigate them.

Lilies.

One of the most useful flowers we have just now are the Japanese lilies and they will be for the next six weeks. Although these flower very well outside, when grown in pots they should be in as cool a house as you have with a heavy shade; then the flowers will come larger.

Alternanthera.

The weather is too hot to attempt anything in the way of propagating. I have seen people attempt to propagate geraniums in early August, and during a very cool time it might succeed, but in such seasons as this it is little use. Leave all propagating till the first of September. There is just one plant that it is well to attend to now and that is the little alternanthera. I know that some growers, or those that grow very largely, lift the old plants before hard frost comes and divide them in the spring, or take cuttings off. I think a better plan is to put the cuttings in during the month of August.

We prepare flats with one inch of light soil and one inch of sand on the surface; or let the whole be very light soil, which will do about as well. Take the cuttings, of which you now have any amount, and dibble them into the sand or soil quite thickly and keep them wet. They will root almost in a few days in any position as long as they are kept wet, and will make good plants before cold weather and can be kept in almost any greenhouse. If in a low temperature they need less water, but you do not want these plants to grow; you just want them to exist during winter. The most difficult variety to winter is paronychioides major, which must have a good high temperature and little water during the dark days, but it's a long while till winter. The thing is, propagate what you want now while the weather is hot.

Carnations.

I do not like to trespass into another man's domain, especially when that department is as well handled as carnations are by Mr. Baur, but I should like to just say that my experience last year was that the earliest planting paid much the best. It was some time before I could believe that the first week in August or even the last week of July was the right time to plant carnations. Twenty years ago we used to plant the last week of September. Then we put it forward to perhaps the first week in September and thought we were doing great, but the past two years we began as early in August as possible, and last year planted three varieties in the first three days of August. They were Ethel Crocker, Marquis and Mrs. Lawson, and they certainly paid us the best of any. I believe if we could get every carnation planted before the 10th of August we would be doing well. We have not suffered for rain in this part of the country. The carnations are larger than usual. Many of the varieties are as large now as they were last year two months later.

There seems to be a wide difference of opinion about Ethel Crocker. A son of mine thinks we ought to plant it again, and we have some very fine plants, if it is worth putting in. Last year it gave us some very fine flowers during October and November, but from the last of November till April it was very shy and we got few till May and June. Then again it was almost our best carnation, surpassing in size the Marquis, with splendid stem, but that is not when we want carnations. Mrs. Lawson was, with us, altogether the finest carnation and most profitable. I am almost ashamed to say that out of 10,000 plants in four houses, for weeks in the winter we did not average more than 300 flowers a day off all the varieties, while by a careful count if it had been 10,000 Mrs. Lawson plants we would have been picking 1,200 a day. Of course I am aware that you must have a variety but anyone who does not get a stock of these will make a mistake.

Mignonette.

I told you a week or two ago to sow your mignonette in the house where you are going to grow it. Look out for wood lice and slugs. The little plants are easily devoured by these pests and instead of leaving one or two of the fine plants which you want they will take them all. Arsenic and granulated sugar spread along the edges of the bench will destroy the wood lice. Air slacked lime will do much to keep the slug down.

Herbaceous Plants.

If you raise any herbaceous plants you may have sown in the spring any species that you wanted to grow. If so there is no better month than August to plant them out and they should be now good, big plants in a frame, and will transplant next month and be well enough established to stand the winter with little or no protection. There is another way of raising them, and that is by sowing in August and when sufficiently large plant out in a cold frame or keep in flats in a very cold house and plant out in the borders in the spring. You will get good results either way, but if you have not sown in the spring you can sow next month with equally good results.

Funeral Design Arranged by W. E. King, E. Santa Cruz, Cal.

Watering—Hoing.

I must give you just a little more cultural directions. Many of you are without the facilities for watering. I am largely, myself, and have often said and will repeat, that there are a good many things that are not benefited. There is quite as much harm done by the use of the hose as there is benefit by it in unskillful hands or unintelligent use. Where watering can be done thoroughly, then a hoing, there is no doubt a good many things that we would be foolish not to water, but a great majority of our growers do not have the hose for the greater part of their crops. The next best thing is to hoe; that is, keep the surface of the soil loose. Now, why it is a benefit to keep the soil loose is not always understood. Not that dew descends on the soil heavily enough to penetrate any depth, but keeping the surface of the soil loose allows evaporation from the soil and consequently moisture will rise from the earth to take its place and in so doing nourishes the roots of the plants.

Now if you were to water and hoe, or after a good heavy shower not hoe, it would be the same thing. The surface of the soil would be baked. It would not be porous; it would be almost caked over like cement. There would be no evaporation from it, consequently no moisture arising from the depths of the soil, and therefore the roots would get no moisture. That is the philosophy of keeping the surface of the soil loose, and it is wonderful how plants will sustain life and even grow in the driest of weather if well cultivated—that is, continually hoed.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

CARNATION NOTES.

Housing.

By exercising a little care and judgment in housing your carnations, you can save yourself a good deal of worry and increase your receipts considerably next winter. Study the wants of the different varieties and the temperature that suits them best and then plant those that want a high temperature together in the same house or houses and those that want a low temperature together in another house, and so on. Those who plant whole houses full of each variety have an easy time giving each variety just the temperature it wants, but those who plant only a few houses and have a dozen or more varieties to plant in them need to exercise a little more care. Even if you only plant one house you can always manage it very well, as nearly every house is warmer at one end than it is at the other end and you can plant accordingly. Some growers plant all those varieties of the same color together to make picking easier, but it is not good policy, except when they want the same temperature.

Then another thing to bear in mind, you know that some varieties get poor as soon as the weather gets warm in spring and it pays better to throw them out soon after Easter and use the room for spring stock or anything you may want the room for. I never saw a grower yet who did not have to work all kinds of schemes to get room in spring for young stuff. Plant those varieties on benches that are most suitable for young stuff and plant those varieties which stand the summer heat best on the benches that are coolest in summer. We find solid bells excellent for summer blooms, as the roots are always much cooler than on raised benches. It will pay you well to arrange to have good carnations at least until a-sters come in.

Plants Inside.

Those young plants you benched some time ago will need constant attention right along in regard to watering and weeding. They will take lots of water during this hot weather and you should keep the walks damp during the day. Give all the air you can, both day and night. Keep them clear of weeds, but if they stand up well it would not be wise to put the supports in place yet for a while. They are in the way when weeding is done, and also in working up the soil, which should be kept loosened up about a half inch deep right along. As soon as the nights become cool they will begin to grow more rapidly and the supports will be needed, and if you keep them clean until then you will have little trouble with weeds until towards spring. Keep the flower shoots picked off until about September 1, as the blooms will not amount to much and they only take the strength from the plant, which should be making as many shoots as possible.

Plants in the Field.

The plants in the field have not made as much growth as they did by this time last year, as we have had a good deal of dry weather lately around here. Those that were put out in good time have made fair sized plants, and they are really better for planting than we had last year. They are better matured and will not suffer so much in transplanting. Don't put off planting because your plants may not be as large as you would like to have them. They will take hold quickly and grow all the more rapidly in the moist soil and the fresh atmosphere in the greenhouse. We planted all ours from 3-inch pots and they are plenty large enough to house now, and as soon as it rains again digging will commence.

I want to say again, "Don't dig carnations while the ground is dry." Better wait until it rains, even if it throws you a couple of weeks later than you expected to begin planting. Unless there is a good deal of dry foliage on the plants I do not like to pick it off while transplanting, as it keeps them out of the soil too long and they suffer by it. When you do pick it off be very careful that you don't skin the stems; it would be far better to leave the dead foliage on the plants.

We have this year a couple thousand plants of second year seedlings growing in 4-inch pots and ready to plant in now, and we are so well pleased with their appearance that we will likely grow a good many this way next season. They can be plunged outdoors within reach of the hose and you have complete control over them, and in being benefited they do not suffer the least bit. Of course, there is more work than in the field culture, and the expense of the pots, but the results will well repay us, I am sure. A. F. J. BAER.

THE MARQUIS CARNATION.

In answer to many inquiries regarding culture of The Marquis permit me to say through your columns, do not pinch later than the last week in July. House, if possible, first week in August. Before housing shade heavily with mud. Renew this as needed until the plants are established. This is of the utmost importance. Success with The Marquis depends upon the observance of this rule.

Plant firmly in medium loam, one-fifth rotted manure, a judicious sprinkling of lime and wood ashes and a liberal amount of pure bone meal or flour, the latter preferred. Do not plant too deep. As fast as planted water thoroughly, and thereafter not until they are well on the dry side. In the meantime syringe the foliage several times daily, according to the weather, to keep it from drying. Keep rather close, ventilating only on one side to take care of condensation. Draughts must be avoided.

After the plants are established let the shading gradually come off and give more air, and finally all you can while the weather is suitable. Syringe occasionally to keep down red spider. Do not give Marquis too much water. Incline to dry rather than wet culture. A night temperature of 50 degrees suits it. It will bear feeding, but too much nitrogenous food is to be avoided.

After Easter, as the sun's rays are more powerful shade the glass and mulch with well-rotted manure. Renew shading as needed, and you will have Marquis in fine form and good color into the summer. L. E. MARQUISÉE.

BUFFALO.

Various Items.

I have not much to report this week except hot weather, of which our city has had quite its share. Perhaps if it were not for the influx of Pan-American visitors it would be our dulllest days. As it is we do not feel the usual midsummer quiet.

We had a good business meeting of the club last week and our plans for the business end and the entertainment of visitors are about complete. We hope next week to publish a list of the prizes for the bowling and shooting and they will make your mouth water. A fine Winchester rifle is the latest addition to the shooting trophies, donated by Mr. W. J. Palmer, and there are lots of others. So, sportsmen, particularly bowlers, if your team can't be on top there is plenty to induce you to show your skill as individuals.

I find there are florists and nurserymen and ornamental horticulturists who visit our city and the Pan-American and we never know it till some one from the same town comes later and tells us that Mr. So-and-So had been here. We do wish that they would leave their card, at least, in our office in the horticulture building at the Pan-American. Among these we found the past week were Mr. George B. Wiegand (of Don't Know, W. S.); Mr. Fred Atkins, of Eutherford, N. J.; Mr. J. H. Troy and family, of New York; Mr. A. H. Post, of the Florists' Review, an Howard M. Earl, representing W. Atlee Burpee, The latter firm engaged Mr. Rudolph Boettger, of Eggertsville, to grow their large variety of sweet peas for exhibition at the Pan-American.

Pan-American Notes.

There has not been anything very striking in the beds since the Crimson Rambler bed lost its beauty, but the whole appearance of the flower garden improves every day. It is a little too early to see cannas at their best, yet there are some large beds showing up finely. The large beds of F. R. Pierson need another two weeks. Some beds of summer blooming roses are now very fine. The white and pink Cochet, planted by Dingee & Conard; Admiral Schley by John Cook, of Baltimore; Burbank by W. Atlee Burpee & Co., and particularly fine is that splendid little rose Clóthilde Sempert shown in a fine bed by J. C. Vaughan, and a smaller bed by John N. May.

It is pleasant to see a large bed of the old fashioned verbenas making a beautiful show for Henry A. Dreer. The latter firm have so many exhibits that to mention them all would be a long list. Just now their beds of single and double petunias are very fine, so is their grand collection of herbaceous plants. These are never planted with the idea that all should be in flower at once, but there are at the present time many attractive plants. The numerous groups of nymphs planted by Henry A. Dreer last summer are now at their very best, covering the surface of the water and sending up hundreds of flowers. They add greatly to the beauty of the lakes and lagoons. C. W. Ward's large bed of large scarlet geraniums, Le Soliel, is now most brilliant, and so is his bed of Pasture, another fine orange scarlet. The same exhibitor has a very fine bed, a circle twenty-five feet in diameter, the center of Black Beauty cannot and surrounded with several rows of McKinley. But two weeks more and I hope to have much more to say about canas.

The greatest addition to our indoor exhibits of late is a fine collection of palms, dracaenas and pandanus from Prof. Cowell of the Botanic Garden. The Department of Works are still busy planting out thousands of alternantheras and other carpet bedding plants in many designs in the Court of Lilies and Court of Cypress. This makes their season for display rather short, but I suppose it will all look its best when the crowd is largest.

BLOW-OFF VALVES.

The returns from our houses were carried level with the top of the boiler and then dropped vertically beside the boiler wall, entering the boiler with an elbow.

a short piece of 3-inch pipe (3 feet), another elbow pointing upward, and then a short nipple, thus forming a pocket for the sediment from the pipes to collect in. Should not an opening with valve have been left through which to blow out the sediment from the pipe in case it should stop up?

CONSTANT READER.

Replying to above inquiry, a blow off valve in the return connection described is an absolute necessity. Without one there is risk of serious trouble. The valve should be placed as shown in Fig. A.

BOSTON.

Seven more nights have fallen without breaking, seven more mornings have broken without falling, and the seven enclosed days have been quiet ones indeed to the florists of the Hub. They have been clear at the rear end of the procession, farthest from the band wagon. Wholesalers and retailers both report a few minutes' work every morning only, and a Quaker meeting for the rest of the day, during which the spirit moves seldom and without much vigor. All seasonable goods are now represented at the several wholesale establishments and prices are surely low enough all around, depending very much upon the buyer's general method of purchasing and the amount taken, which always regulates figures more than you may think. But quality is hardly up to the standard just now in any one line: little of any thing indeed coming that can be called even good. There would be quite a little excitement except for the fact that good customers are even more scarce than good goods. There may be an item in the aster situation. Owing to the hot streaks in the weather probably, the first crop at least will prove in the nature of a failure. A few of them are straggling in but most of them look as if they were sorry they came. Prices range from 1 to 2 cents each.

Money is also off crop and all that purchasers bring in is very small and can be readily jingled. Bills are usually inscribed with one figure, altogether too apt to be a straight one, and many uncollected accounts look like permanent assets. Vacations have the call. They are mostly of a local character so far as I have heard, P. L. Carbone being the only one to actually leave the country. His habit of dropping over to Europe every summer seems to be getting chronic.

It makes the collision between the steamer "Tremont" and yacht "Wild Duck" sound nearer when we learn that J. M. Tuohy was on board the former and escaped by jumping to the deck of the rescuing steamer. His story proves that the newspaper accounts were modified to benefit the steamship company, as he saw several passengers go down between the vessels and the danger to all on board was considered much more imminent than reported. He lost a brand new hat and knows enough to feel very grateful to have a head left to put the next one upon. He credits one so-called life preserver to his account with the steamship company, interesting from the fact that it is partly filled with lard-rushes and is much in the nature of a fake. Pretty place to work the great American business principle!

Club Outing.

The Florists' Club's excursion to Lo-eust Point July 8 was not as well attended as was expected. The weather and general misunderstandings were responsible. However, those who went are reported to have had a good time. The ladies had a bowling match at the grove and this proved one of the most exciting events of the day.

A baseball game between the "Boiler Men" and "Florists" was quite an affair. The former won with a score of 13 to 8. The fat men's race was won by Traendly, who went it alone, quite a distance. A meeting of the club was held on the boat, President Sheridan presiding. Messrs. O'Mara, Manda, Burns, May, Dean, Burnham and Duckham were appointed a committee to nominate officers for next year. Arthur Herrington informed those present that Mr. Twonbly had offered $100 as a special prize for the Madison Square show next fall. The meeting adjourned till the 15th.

Various Items.

Quite a few florists have sailed for Europe the past week or so. P. Onwkerk, Julius Roehrs, H. A. Siebrecht and wife and Thomas Young, Jr., were among the New Yorkers bound for a pleasant time in Europe. Most of those left behind steal away for a day or two to escape the boiling city.

A vast amount of flowers have been sent to outgoing steamers lately; it would appear that the old custom is being revived, but instead of incongruous designs, the tendency seems to be toward boxes of flowers. The leading florists make quite a display with wagons and liveried folks at these steamers. A special messenger with flowers from H. H. Battles, Philadelphia, made the New York coons show white eyes at the sailing of the Deutschland on Thursday.

Flowers of mostly all sorts have been extremely scarce; scarcely any roses are coming in, and sweet peas have been very much damaged by hot weather. Those having Victorias and Brunners are getting their own prices for them.

Lucatos, the Greek florist of Seventy-fourth street and Columbus avenue, is dead.

Richard Griggs, the well known Dutch-ess county gardener, has taken a position with Reuter on the John Spalding place at New London, Conn. Mr. Reuter, of Westery, R. I. recently purchased that old landmark and has also opened a store in New London, which Richard and his daughter will manage.

At the special meeting of the Florists' Club held on Monday night convention matters were discussed pro and con. The train will leave West Forty-second street at 9 a. m., foot of Franklin street, at 8:45 a. m., on Aug. 5, arriving at Buffalo at 7:30 p. m. If 100 can be got to go a special train will be provided. The fare will be $10.75 excursion, on the certificate plan. It is earnestly hoped a very large delegation will go from this city. The headquarters of the New York club will be at the Larkin Flats, Buffalo. The outing committee's report will be left over until the meeting after the convention. The affair was a financial failure, but gave pleasure to those attending.

Joe Manda exhibited a splendid specimen Onidium flexuosum, for which he was awarded a certificate of merit. Young & Nugent offered $25 for twenty-five American Beauties at the club's fall show. The supplementary schedule for the New York show will be issued early in September.

Bowling.

The return match between the Flatbush and New York Florists' Bowling Clubs took place on Monday night on the alleys of the latter. The weather was intensely hot and only cranks enjoyed the sweatbox. Flatbush was represented by a weak team, they even having to borrow a New York man. Of course, they were beaten, but they won the last game and succeeded in piling up the highest game of the tournament. Following are the scores:

NEW YORK.		FLATBUSH.
Lang	121 122 167	Leniz	140 141 169
Traendly	145 140 136	Schultz	141 151 149
Siebrecht	130 140 118	Raynor	135 136 111
Burns	142 150 153	Woecker	167 121 122
Theilmann	152 110 110	Riley	152 143 200
	783 754 744		696 732 811

A meeting of the bowling club will be held at Traendly's store on Monday next at 7 o'clock. All members are urgently requested to attend. Bowling next Monday night will be on the new alleys at Thirty-first and Broadway at 8 p. m.

ST. LOUIS.

The Picnic.

The Florists' Club outing last Thursday at Preister's Park was decidedly a social success and a most enjoyable affair. The party included over sixty and many of the florists were accompanied by their wives and children. The weather was perfect, it being an ideal summer day. All the arrangements were in the hands of the trustees, Messrs. Fillmore, Halstedt and Mohr. The boys and girls missed the jubilee singers and cake walkers of last year but the band furnished by Belleville was O. K. and made fine music for dancing and singing. The younger folks had a great time dancing up in the cool pavilion overlooking the lake. There were no games for the children as usual. The men folks enjoyed themselves bowling and playing quints. We had a great time and those who failed to come missed it very much. At 9 p. m. the cars were in waiting and everybody expressed themselves as having had a good time.

The Market.

Business conditions remain unchanged; there is a fair demand for first quality stock which is very scarce and the retailers are compelled to take the poor stock to fill their orders. The store men are very much dissatisfied with the poor flowers that are coming into our wholesale market and are sending outside for most of their stock, which seems a little better than the local stuff.

Roses are still quoted from $1 to $3 per 100 with Kaisersins in the lead for the demand at $4 for the best; Brides and Maids as a rule are very poor with short stems; Beauties seem all out and very few come in.

Carnations are of poor quality and only white seems to sell well; the colored stock is very small and is unsalable; $1 per 100 is the price asked. Asters meet with ready sale at $1 per 100 but are scarce. Tuberoses are now coming in and sell for 5 cents a stalk; single flowers are $1 per 100. All kinds of greens are selling well just now. Funeral work is all we have got to depend on for business and even that class of work has been scarce with some of the dealers.

Notes.

J. F. Windt left last week for California to spend the summer. This is Mr. Windt's first visit to the Pacific coast.

John Young and wife will soon leave for Atlantic City to spend the summer. John will not be at the convention this year.

Will Young and family will leave this week for the east and will take in the Pan-American about convention time.

...e next meeting of the Florists' Club, on Thursday, Aug. 1 at 3 p. m., will be a very important one and the members should attend and see that we elect good officers for the ensuing year, as good officers mean a great deal for the club the coming year. We want the S. A. F. convention the year of the great World's fair, and this means plenty of work ahead, but if the members will only work together, attend the monthly meetings of the club and bring in a few new members the club will be in good shape to entertain the S. A. F. and other visitors during the World's Fair year.

The bowling club on last Monday deecided that the members had lost all interest in bowling and that the club disbanded. The few who still have the bowling fever will join the city league this winter and if we can get enough, and we need only six, will put a team of all-florists in the big St. Louis league which is now being formed. The team will probably be made up of the following florist bowlers: C. A. Kuehn, A. Y. Ellison, J. J. Bencke, Carl Beyer, John Kunz, F. C. Weber and F. M. Ellis.

St. Louis will not be represented at the Buffalo convention, that meet is settled. Too bad for us and a good thing for the other clubs. — J. J. B.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower market is in good shape for the end of July. There is an excellent demand for the rather small quantity of good flowers coming into town. Most of the roses are poor, but the good ones readily bring $4, $5 and even $6 per 100. Carnations are getting poorer; they bring from $1 per 100 down. Asters are partially taking their place and can now be had in a variety of color; $1 per 100 is the usual price, but a few bring more. Double petunias are very useful; 75 cents per 100 is about the rate. A. L. Pallett, of Frankford, has a new fringed white one which is a good seller. There is quite a lot of nice valley about. Both S. S. Penneck and George M. Moss are receiving regular shipments. Prices are $2, $3 and $4 per 100. Sweet peas can still be had. Hollyhocks are about; also a few balsams, which seem a little out of date. There are some auratum lilies about.

Leo Niessen is receiving some good Beauties from Carl Jurgens of Newport. Unfortunately it cannot be said that this is "sending coals to Newcastle," for our Beauty growers have little or nothing fit to be seen now.

Various Items.

M. Rice noticed several interesting features in the florists' shops abroad. The French, who are noted for their taste, are devoting a good deal of attention to the dressing of plants. One idea that appeared popular was a tasty arrangement made by putting an azalea, for instance, in a straw basket; the plant is slightly tilted forward to display the blooms to advantage; at the back a T shaped stick is inserted and on it a second azalea is placed so as to keep the ball of earth below the crown of the first; the stick supports the second plant firmly; no pots are used, the balls being covered with moss. The plants are dressed with ribbon.

There is a growing demand in Paris for light handled baskets with zinc pans inside. These are used in a variety of ways, those filled with blooming plants and climbing vines that cover the handles being especially effective. Some are small enough for a single 2 or 3-inch fern. Another novelty is the plain birch bark cross, which when ornamented with a simple bunch, say of Beauties, tied with ribbon, has proved very taking. Penneck Bros. had, by the way, quite a run on these crosses last Easter.

Mr. Rice found a great improvement in crepe paper; it is now made much thinner than formerly and with a gloss that gives it a silky finish that is very pleasing.

J. F. & R. H. Mergenthaler, of East Washington Lane, Germantown, are making additions to their plant. They did well with roses last season.

W. T. Lovett, Newtown, Bucks county, is still bringing in some good Brides and Maids.

George E. Campbell is putting in a new boiler and repairing his houses. George E. would much prefer building new houses to monkeying with old ones, and it won't be long before he does build in all probability.

Henry F. Mielch is putting in new seed drawers and making improvements in the interior of his store, which will add to its appearance.

Charles Fox is staying with his son Charles H. Fox at La Belle Inn, Atlantic City, N. J.

Joseph Beers & Son have five acres of ground on the Linekin Pike above Haines street, on which they now have their entire plant, consisting of six fine greenhouses devoted chiefly to roses and carnations. Hydrangeas, a specialty at the old place (Sixteenth and Cayuga streets, sold about a year ago), are to be dropped as soon as the stock can be marketed. Two houses have been lately planted with Brides and Maids in sol beds; these houses have been run for two years, an unusual plan about here, and from all appearances might have been run profitably for another season, but it was thought best to replant this month. These houses produced very fine blooms, winning prizes and earning no inconsiderable reputation and cash in the past. Another house planted with the same varieties one year ago still looks well and will be kept at work for another year, it is thought, without rest. The carnations are all planted out in the field. The place is beautifully situated, the arrangement practical and the stock well grown. PHIL.

CANADIAN HORT. ASS'N.

A copy of the printed program for the fourth annual convention of the Canadian Horticultural Association, to be held at London, Ont., Aug. 5th and 6th, has been sent us. The program covers numerous live topics and should prove very interesting and instructive. Copies of the program may be had by addressing A. H. Ewing, secretary, Berlin, Ont.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Roses and carnations are still poor and scarce, though the quality of the latter averages better now than that from outside plants are coming in. Last Sunday the thermometer went to 103, breaking all records for this city and the roses snow it by breaking all records for poor quality. Never before have roses been so poor here at any season and this has been the case for several weeks. Sweet peas have also suffered terribly from the great heat and there are practically no good ones to be had.

Supply is short of demand and most any sort of a rose will bring $1 a hundred while the best go up to $4. Good outdoor carnations are quoted at $1 and some of the best whites go as high as $1.50. Gladioli are now coming in in quantity and the best spikes of white and light colored flowers bring as high as $6 while the average run go at $3. The light colored gladiolus has helped out many a florist who was unable to get good roses and carnations.

A few good asters are beginning to arrive but many of the plants have been burned out by the awful heat and the cut will probably be much less than usual. One grower who is bringing in good asters was enabled to do so through having provided an ample water supply and making liberal use of it.

Shipping demand holds up well for the season. Local demand is as slow as ever but there is difficulty in finding stock to fill what few orders are received.

All the wholesale houses are now closing at 5 p. m.

Various Items.

At the meeting of the Florists' Club last Friday evening the picnic and transportation committees reported progress and other routine business was transacted. This will be the last meeting until the fall season.

The Florists' Club's special train to Buffalo by the Wabash Railway will leave Dearborn station at 4 p. m., Monday, Aug. 5, and will reach Buffalo at 7:30 Tuesday morning.

McKellar & Winterson are having their entire establishment remodeled. New walls and ceilings will be put in, an immense new ice box built, and the whole place newly painted and decorated. The entrance will also be changed so that the store may be entered from the basement level the same as those south of them. One can then pass through all the wholesale houses on the basement level, without climbing a stair, and this route will be known as Cut Flower Avenue.

In years gone by when most of the retail florists were on Wabash Ave., when a "shopper" visited all the stores in succession with the intent of getting prices down to rock bottom by playing one florist's prices against the others, she was said to be "doing the avenue." The retailers will now have an opportunity to "do the avenue" and the wholesalers—if they can.

Wm. Kelley, the jolly Irish expressman who has done so much hauling for the wholesale florists and who was very popular on the market, died last Monday and was buried Wednesday. A handsome wreath was sent to the funeral by employees of the wholesale houses.

Lloyd Vaughan, representing E. H. Hunt, has returned from a successful trip through Michigan and Ohio. He is now preparing for the trip to Buffalo.

Recent changes at E. H. Hunt's have doubled the space devoted to the wire department and given much needed room.

Mrs. C. M. Dickinson returned last Monday from Seattle, Wash.

E. C. Amling has returned from his outing. He will soon make a trip east and will take in the Buffalo convention on his way back.

The Klinger Rose Co. has been incorporated with a capital stock of $5,000, to carry on the nursery and floral business. The incorporators are H. G. Chamberlain, J. D. Marmaduke and F. Ross.

H. Bayersdorfer and wife, Philadelphia, are in town.

Bowling.

The last four of the final ten games were rolled last Tuesday night and the scores of the ten games appear below. The first six will constitute the team to represent the club at Buffalo. If the boys can show up such averages at the national tournament they ought to make a clean sweep. Messrs. Paulus and Grant still have some games to play, but it is unlikely the result will be changed as regards the team. On next Tuesday the team will play a few more games to keep them in form. The team is now in charge of Captain Winterson, who will direct future training. The Edgely cup was ordered polished and expressed to the chairman of the committee on sports at Buffalo. Following are the scores of the deciding ten games:

The Club's Picnic.

The Florists' Club's picnic at Riverside yesterday (Wednesday) was a huge success. About 200 were present at the grounds, the number including many from out-of-town points. There were races, games and dancing, and twenty prizes were distributed. The game of baseball between the Retailers and the Growers resulted in a score of 8 to 6 in favor of the Retailers. There was plenty to eat and drink, and Ed. Winterson and Charley Balluff, in granger hats, dispensed the liquids with frills and tucks, but without gores.

All present enjoyed themselves heartily. The liveliest fun of all was when the pair of lady's garters was presented to Anton Then for his graceful waiting.

CINCINNATI

The Market.

As far as the wholesale houses are concerned, business is as near to a standstill as it ever is, and this is due not so much to lack of demand as to the extreme shortage of stock of every kind. There is practically nothing coming in. Some few growers are carrying over a house or two of carnations or roses, but the quality of this stock is so poor as to scarcely pay for the cutting. Out door stock is in nearly all cases at a standstill, owing to the extreme heat and lack of rain. What little is cut looks pretty much dried up. There are a few tuberoses coming in and they are snatched up at good prices. A few second crop sweet peas are also in evidence.

Club Outing.

The florists annual outing took place last Thursday. The day was awfully hot, but still a good number of the craft braved the sun and had a fine time. There were bowling contests and ball games between growers and store men, but the scores in most cases would not look well in print. The cigars, however, which were the prize offered, were all right and were appreciated. To show how well the committee on prizes did their duty and incidentally the spirit of generosity which pervades the average Cincinnati florist, I would like to mention that our friend, Chas. Critchell, was obliged to stand at the gate and present a cigar to every corner. But please don't ask Charlie as to the goodness of those cigars.

The star event of the day was the bicycle race. This was won by Mr. Gray. He showed that he was a rider from way back, no one else being in it with

FERTILIZERS FOR FLORIDA.

In answer to "Florida," who requests information about best fertilizers for roses—In Florida light soils we have found the best fertilizers to be "blood and bone" of highest grade, supplemented with a fair proportion of sulphate of potash. Quantity must be according to the needs of the soil, varying greatly in this State. We apply about three times per year. REASONER Bros., Oneco, Fla.

CANADIAN HORTICULTURAL ASSOCIATION CONVENTION,
5th AND 6th AUGUST, AT LONDON, ONT.

Programmes have now been sent out to all addresses obtainable by the secretary. If any one has been left out a postal card to the secretary, A. H. Ewing, Berlin, Ont., will bring one by return mail. All railroads running into London are giving single fare return tickets good for ten days from August 3d to 13th and probably a special train will be run from Toronto and Detroit. This is a rare opportunity for florists and "ornamental horticulturists" to turn out in full force. There is no doubt of the benefit to be obtained by everybody in the profession. The London Horticultural Society holds its annual summer show on the 6th of August. Trade exhibits will be set up in the same hall.

Cheap Rates to London.

The London Old Boys' Association have succeeded in obtaining single fare round trip tickets good for ten days from all points in Ontario and Quebec. Delegates to the London convention of the Canadian Horticultural Association should bear this in mind and ask their agent for certificate to attend the London Old Boys' Reunion, which will entitle them to free return trip ticket, on being countersigned by the secretary of the London Old Boys' Association and the railroad agent at London. The secretary of the association assures me today that there will be at least 500 tickets in addition to the special excursions, so that I feel confident in assuring delegates of cheap rates.

WILLIAM GAMMAGE,
London, Ont., July 22.

CHICAGO TO BUFFALO.

The Chicago Florists' Club transportation committee has arranged with the Wabash railway for a special train to Buffalo for the convention of the Society of American Florists, August 6 to 10.

The train will leave Monday, August 5, at 4 p. m. and will reach Buffalo at 7:30 Tuesday morning. The committee is assured of an unusually well appointed special train. The rate will be $13 for the round trip, and less should there be any cut in rates by the railroads for that week. The sleeping car fare will be $3 a berth each way. An excellent dining car service is assured.

Florists in the west and northwest are cordially invited to travel with the Chicago party.

Berths may be reserved by addressing any member of the committee as below:

Trade Notes.

In the way of business there is not much doing but most of the boys are busy either building or repairing or getting ready to house carnations, or trying to find cool places. The weather bureau reports that this has been the hottest day in 31 years; at 2 p. m. it was 106 degrees in the shade, and in the greenhouses from 120 to 125 most of the day. Oh, but wouldn't I like to have some of those folks who think it must be such pleasant work to be continually working among the beautiful flowers and hitch them to a wheel barrow a few hours on one of these warm days. I think they would go away thinking that the poor florists earn their money.

E. A. Nelson is working hard on his new range of houses. He likes the new iron gutter very much now since he has become better acquainted with it. He says he wished at first he had not bought them. They certainly look neat.

J. Hartje has most of his framework up and it will not take him long to finish.

On the 9th of July a good crowd of the boys met at A. Schreiber's home to help celebrate his tenth wedding anniversary and a good time was enjoyed by all. The boys presented Mr. and Mrs. Schreiber with a beautiful china dinner set.

On the 17th the club held its annual outing at Spring Lake Park, which is a beautiful spot about 18 miles out on one of the interurban electric lines. About 75 members and friends went out and enjoyed a pleasant day in spite of the heat. About 5 p. m. everybody was driven to shelter by the heaviest rain fall of the season. In spite of the fact that it cut short the evening's pleasure everybody was glad to see the rain, as everything was suffering for water. There has been no good out door stuff lately except what was watered right along. Asters have made their appearance and they are about all that is saleable. Roses are horribly poor and carnations are no better.

Geo. Wiegand has just returned from Cleveland, Buffalo and the east. A. B.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.—The Kalamazoo Nursery and Floral Company has purchased the glass and material in the greenhouses formerly owned by Ang. Dresel, Chicago, and they will be removed to this city and re-erected.

LANCASTER, PA.—J. P. Siebold is busy remodeling and repairing his greenhouses. He has given up the growing of cut flowers and will now grow only plants and hothouse vegetables.

COLUMBIAS, OHIO.—The Livingston Seed Co. will build a range of five houses, each 18x100, all connected, and running north and south. They will be heated by steam.

WHEELING, W. VA.—E. O'Neil reports the planting out season this spring as the best ever known here. Cut flower trade has also been good.

DORCHESTER, MASS.—William Galbraith, an old time gardener and florist, died at his home here July 1, aged 76 years.

PITTSBURG.

Various Items.

Poor carnations, poor roses, plenty of sweet peas, lilies and some herbaceous flowers, is about what the supply is in cut flowers. Some lanceifolium lilies are coming in now. Business is dull, only here and there a little excitement over an order of any size.

The club at its last meeting appointed a committee on transportation and accommodation to the coming convention; also final arrangements were made for the picnic at Burki's farm at Lakertown which was held on the 17th with an attendance of about 150. The weather was beautiful and everyone seemed to enjoy himself. Refreshments were plentiful, also good cool spring water. Some dancing was done on the large barn floor; a game of ball played on the extensive lawn in front of the mansion. Of course all took a peep at the large new iron frame houses one of which was planted with roses and the other one about ready for the plants. The water supply and pumping plant was inspected and pronounced perfect. Capacity 80 gallons per minute. All agreed the farm was well adapted to the business and some valuable buildings were on it.

The next meeting will be in August when the convention will be discussed. BARR.

AT THE PAN-AMERICAN.

Messrs. H. L. Mosier and C. T. Watson, of Reasener Bros., Omeo, Fla., will be at the Pan-American Exposition until the 29th and will be glad to see friends. Inquire of the Florida Commissioner of Exhibits, Mr. Pfeifer.

WESTERY, R. I.—Mr. Louis J. Reuter, son of the well known florist, and Miss Maude E. Litchfield were married July 17. The decoration at the church were the most elaborate ever seen in this city. The happy couple are now on their wedding trip. They will visit various points in the west and will spend a few days at the Pan-American Exposition. On their return they will be at home at 10 Moss street. Mr. S. J. Reuter has leased the greenhouses of John Spalding at New London, Conn., and will continue the business there as well as his establishment here.

NEW LONDON, CONN.—John Spalding, the veteran florist, has leased his greenhouses to S. J. Reuter, of Westery, R. I., and will retire from the business. Mr. Reuter will continue the business under the title "The John Spalding Company." He has leased a store at 95 State street, which will be connected with the greenhouses by telephone. Mr. Reuter will continue his business at Westery, R. I., as before.

FLATBUSH, N. Y.

Bowling.

Just by way of practice and to incidentally stir up a little more enthusiasm among knights and patrons of the bowling alleys, the Flatbush florists invited the New York florists to roll a friendly match on the alleys at 471 Flatbush avenue. Accordingly, on Thursday, though the night was intensely hot, quite a crowd gathered to witness and partake of the sport.

It is a well-known fact that there has never been a dull night when the Flatbush boys are on the alleys and the vaudeville show when a match takes place is well worth going a long distance to see. "The Manhattan Indians couldn't appreciate the "friendliness" of the intent, and with wild whoops went in for slaughter. "Lighthouses," "cocked hats," hard won "spares," yes, and even "poodles," were not infrequent causes for demonstrations on both sides; in fact, so determined was the onslaught on the silent soldiers at the end of the alleys that the pin boys approached the dead men with fear in every move. Any one who has ever watched John Raynor and Louis Schmutz deliver cannon balls can appreciate the pin boys' dread.

Perhaps the intense energy spent in trying to smash the pins accounts for the low individual results. Of course, Chicago, having plenty of wind to cool their alleys, enables Ed Winterson, Geo. Axmus and the rest to keep dry and pile up the big scores. Every bowler is watching, but it is quietly understood that whoever wins at Buffalo will earn what they get.

But to our story. Well, the New Yorks wouldn't stop till they won the three straight games from Flatbush, and even after that was settled there was a quiet match between Raynor, representing the Flatbushers, and Siebrecht, of the New Yorks, the former making 174 and the latter the highest score he ever made, 215. Willie said he did it as an incentive to his team in future events. Of course, the New York and Flatbush teams will roll at Buffalo. The scores were as follows:

FLATBUSH. NEW YORK.

J. I. Raynor.....145	148	144	T. Lang.....137	141	138
A. Zeller.....117	112	124	F. Traudny.....133	135	149

L. Schmutz.....133	118	81	J. Theilmann.....164	157	160
P. Riley.....145	128	151

There was some keen competition for jack pots on the side alleys where the following scores were put up:

Woolker.....113	137	129	Ussing.....99	106	88
Stewart.....99	118	111	M. Clarke.....126	154
Fapa Zeller.....113	138	96	B. Berfield.....109	115
Langshir.....408	96	96	Doglan.....114	110
Van Hoosen.....146	145	145	H. Daffledouze.....133
Woesner.....161	129	165

It is expected that a return match will take place in New York, probably Monday night. Quite a large delegation of Brooklyn and Flatbush florists with their wives announced their intention of going to Buffalo on Aug. 5th. J. I. D.

THE RETAIL

FLORIST.....

Summer Decorations.

Summer decorations afford innumerable opportunities for displaying all the ingenuity and artistic ability of the professional decorator. There are many instances where individuals have become wealthy and famous as society leaders by their powers of absorption and application of ideas. The great demand for novelty is responsible for many fakes or satires on good taste, yet without it brings forth much that is good, though it frequently occurs that the silly and and incongruous is preferred to that which is really good.

Selection depends on the many little whims and fancies common to our wealthy people. Very often some overrated and unctuous pet of society, whose fountain of knowledge is supplied by others' brains, is given charge of affairs, with the result that not only is the experienced decorator handicapped and exasperated by a nuisance, but the credit of his work and ideas are deliberately stolen from him. Notwithstanding all the present drawbacks, we believe there is a bright future for the florist who makes a careful study of decorative art, and is equal to emergencies as they arise.

The matter of summer decorations has been very much neglected. We feel assured that if people knew how much delightful beauty could be gotten up at small cost, there would be vastly more pleasure attached to summer festivities. There is a general feeling of antipathy toward pretention and studied formality among a large class at certain times, and a knowledge of moods and what is correct under all circumstances is very necessary to success. There are, though, a great many who seek show and glitter for the most trivial occasion, and one needs to study people almost as much as art.

In many American cities and in almost every American summer resort there is an increasing demand for the services of those capable of designing and executing decorative schemes for carnivals, garden fetes, banquets and all manner of festivals. There is room for much improvement and greater development along these lines. To our mind the florist, whose eye is color trained, is the most competent person to take charge of such matters. Mistakes are frequently made by an overprofuse use of one's pet material; this is a common occurrence at most large affairs. It was apparent to anyone except an electrician that the inaugural ball decorations at Washington last March were spoiled by the excessive use of electric lights.

In cases where a flag decorator is permitted full sway nothing else gets a chance, and we must admit that some florists spoil their work by shutting out materials other than that commonly sold on their own narrow market. Composite decorations, where each element is used in a way to bring out the full beauty of the other, and help to emphasize the effect of the whole, are the only successful ones. In fact, the day is gone when one sided decorations are capable of eliciting even a small degree of commendation.

There should be a vast difference in the color scheme of winter and summer decorations; all should be in accord with dress, furnishings and the general spirit of the season; what might be classed as luridly out of place in winter, is most appropriate in summer when gayety runs riot among, and finds rest, too, in all that is brightest. This is impressively exemplified in the tones and hues of summer flora. The extreme severity of American weather, and the continuous demand for certain high grade flowers requires an all year round greenhouse cultivation of such, and whilst under existing circumstances all manner of flowers are more or less of necessity considered appropriate, the day will come, and come soon, when more attention and appreciation will be given to the many floral gems that belong strictly to the American garden.

July and August are the months when flowers are scarcest in this country, not because it is impossible to produce them, but that there is a wrong idea prevalent that it doesn't pay to grow them.

Of course, in most all pretentious decorations electricity plays a most important part, and the possibilities with that element become greater every year—even now it has become a necessary adjunct—but whilst an electrician may be necessary to attend to the wiring, it by no means follows that he should be permitted to dictate as to ultimate results; he is prone to follow too formal lines and to make a stew with color. In the majority of cases where lights are used for decorative effect, red, white and blue, or attempts at that com-binated, are most generally used with lamentable results. The most effective way is to get away from formal lines and to group the colors. There should be a dominant or prevailing color in every decoration. Variety is desirable and can be provided, but care should be taken to have the whole harmonize. It doesn't matter whether it be for a public city carnival, a garden party or a house dance, the same rule applies. It is much better to have the lights put inside Japanese lanterns, or covers easily made from crepe paper or cloth, and where grounds or roadways are to be illuminated one-inch or one and one-half inch caliper trees can be cut from swamps and stuck in the ground where desired, and groups of lamps hung upon them.

Almost every country house has its veranda or piazza which can be made very attractive. Screens can be made with colored cheese cloth on a light wooden frame; trim these with a few vines and a cluster of ferns; where a blank space has to be covered cheese cloth or bunting may be used to advantage as a background. Red, yellow and green are the most suitable colors, but they should be kept sufficiently apart and the same or contrasting tones used with them. There is an abundance of foliage procurable everywhere in summer and cool restful effects can be produced by a plentiful use of it, but stiff garlands or ropes are out of place.

Fantastic Porto Rican carnival hats tied with bands or loops of bright ribbon can be arranged in groups and utilized by guests or made to hold loose clusters of flowers. Fans can be had in all shapes and colors, and even the cheapest when tied with a bit of bright ribbon is a pretty and acceptable feature. Sus-ported baskets or pans of Boston fern or Asparagus Sprengeri always look well, and there is nothing finer than large plants of rich colored caladiums.

In many places it is possible to use small fountains, the surroundings of which should be all green with a few water lilies in the basin. Seats arranged in tete-a-tete fashion can be placed so as to enable guests to rest where they can see and enjoy some distinctive section of your work.

With regard to the interior of a house where expensive furniture is used nothing but plants and cut flowers are in order; a few light vines of honeysuckle, Clematis paniculata or wild smilax hung or twined in conspicuous places are permissible, but the utmost care should be taken not to spoil either your work or the surroundings by overdoing things. The matter of suitable cut flowers is the all important item in decorative work. Almost anything can be used providing it has not a repugnant odor as in the case of funkias, Lilium Amatum and a few others. Gladioli can now be had in every tone and combination of color and charming effects can be obtained from them.

Such flowers as zinnias, cannas, delphiniums, phlox, helianthus, cosmos, heliconias, cornflowers, sweet peas, lilies, asters, rudbeckias, golden rod and the many ornamental grasses, are especially good and pleasing when arranged gracefully in vases. Orchids, greenhouse grown roses and such tender flowers are Every progressive florist should attend the Buffalo convention, not merely for what is to be seen there, but to talk to and exchange ideas with fellow craftsmen. We hope to meet many of our friends there and chat about stores and what is best for the retailer, and by the way, don't you think it's about time we got together and organized a retailers' section of the S. A. F? YVERA.

CHRYSANTHEMUM NOTES.

Rust.

It is at this season of the year when thunderstorms are frequent, and the air is reeking with moisture, that the rust begins to put in an appearance. Doubtless the heat and excessive moisture in the atmosphere is responsible for this, these conditions evidently being very favorable for the rapid development of the spores.

I am glad to say that so far we have not found a trace on our plants, and we

The rust always appears first on the bottom leaves, the reason being possibly because they are nearer the moist surface of the soil, and do not get the light and air they should receive, or else because it is on the old bottom leaves that the disease is being carried over from the old plants. It may be possible that a little (and a very little is sufficient) of the rust had escaped observation at planting out time, and as soon as conditions were favorable had increased and multiplied.

It is always wise to spray your plants several times in the spring with the sulphide of potassium, in the proportion of one ounce to two gallons of water. Some writers seem to think this solution will only prevent the spread of the disease and will not kill the spores. I have satisfied myself that it will kill the spores if applied in such a manner that every portion of the under side of the leaf is saturated in the mixture. It has been repeatedly stated that the rust will grow only on the chrysanthemum proper, and will not live even on its near relative the common ox eye daisy, but it has been recently shown before the Royal Horticultural Society in London growing on the cornflower, Centaurea cyanus, which proves clearly that this statement is unfounded.

We have always adopted the practice of taking our stock plants into another house as soon as the plants were through flowering, so that if there were any spores left in the house, they would die during the winter for want of a host plant to live on. Some growers seem to call any of the several leaf diseases the rust when they have no possible relation to it whatever. Anyone that has seen the carnation rust will readily recognize the chrysanthemum rust by the similarity of the two. I have heard the disease that used to sweep off Golden Wedding in such a wholesale manner referred to as rust when really it has not the faintest resemblance.

One thing seems certain. If it is proved that the rust will grow outside on other plants our winters are long enough and cold enough to kill any spores that may be produced and the cause and cure rests with the florist in his greenhouse. The disease has not been nearly so virulent with us as it has in England, and everything now points to the fact that in a season or so if everyone handled their stock carefully rust would cease to exist saving when we imported it on plants from other countries.

TERMINAL AND CROWN BUDS.

M. A. F. asks if the terminal bud would be satisfactory on the following varieties: Glory of the Pacific, Pres. Smith, Helen Bloodgood, Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. J. Jones, Gloriscum, Bonnafon, Mutual Friend, Trilby and Kioto.

Also if the crown bud is taken would it not bring in the crop rather early. They do not need flowers until the 20th of October.

The terminal bud would be far the best to use on the varieties mentioned since M. A. F. is a beginner in the business, because it is much more easily handled than the crown bud, and all the kinds will produce a satisfactory flower from terminal buds. Mrs. Robinson would produce a much larger flower from a late out of place in summer decorations unless for special table or personal adornment. Garden roses, nasturtiums, sweet peas, water lilies and such class of material give more pleasure. There is more or less of an al fresco or informal atmosphere about the summer dining table and in no way should the appetite be spoiled by an over display of anything, especially flowers.

As to flowers to be worn it should be remembered that any incumbrance is intolerable in warm weather and large corsage or hand bouquets come under that head. One or two select flowers is more appropriate and these are more appreciated if it be arranged that they be given by a friend. There are many occasions where miniature "battles of flowers" can be arranged to the delight of all, and in this case the above mentioned carnival hats can be used to carry ammunition. There is an unlimited number of games and "affairs" where flowers can be made the chief feature, not with artificial substitutes but the real products of nature. It is the duty of every retail florist to study out and advance everything that tends to increase the demand for his work and material.

believe this is due to the extreme care we have exercised for the past three years, to immediately destroy any new plants that showed any traces of rust when received, and in hand picking, and spraying with sulphide of potassium, any plants on which the rust appeared later on in the season. One variety, Mrs. J. Tranter, that was badly infested last season is this year so far perfectly clean.

It seems reasonable to suppose from our experience, that the chrysanthemum rust, like the carnation rust, is something that you need not have if you will use proper care in selection for propagation, and in the general treatment of the plants.

Spraying and watering the beds in dull weather should never be practiced under any circumstances. You can easily verify the fact that too much moisture is responsible for the rapid increase and spread of the rust if you have any plants outside. They may be to all intents and purposes perfectly clean, yet if several days in succession are cloudy and wet, you can at the end of a week find the rust on all the bottom leaves, and rapidly getting all over the plant.

rown bud "taken" say the first week in September, and Mrs. Jerome Jones must be taken on a crown bud if it is figured on as a white variety; but if color does not cut much figure, the terminal bud is all right as the flower comes good, though of a delicate pink color.

By taking the crown bud on varieties in August, the grower does not get in his crop any earlier, in fact with several varieties the terminal bud will develop first though it will not be so large or well finished as the flower from the crown bud. The reason why some growers take the crown bud is because they want to get a flower of the largest possible size.

We will take up the question of buds in our notes next month (August) and if M. A. F. is interested he will take a few crown buds to see how they come out.

Saving Glory of the Pacific, none of the varieties he mentions will be in flower before the 20th of October.

CARNATION NOTES.

Up-to-Date Planting.

For the benefit of those to whom carnation planting, in an up-to-date manner, may be new I will give in detail one method of procedure, which we find very successful in housing our carnations without losing many plants while they become established on the benches. We like to plant a whole house at a time if it is at all possible; therefore we refill all the benches before we begin planting and mix in the bonemeal (about 100 pounds to 1,000 square feet of bench space) and whatever other fertilizers are to be mixed into the soil, and rake it in well, after which we give it a good watering. (The above quantity of bonemeal is about right if not much other fertilizer is used, but if much else is put on the quantity of bone should be reduced.) After the watering we allow the soil to dry out until the day before we are ready to begin planting, at which time we examine the soil and give enough water to make it about as moist as you like your soil for potting and see that it is moist all the way down to the bottom of the bench.

Some growers pack the soil before planting and when the soil is inclined to be loose or spongy it is a good plan, but our soil is heavy enough to settle down close without packing. We like a rather heavy soil and if necessary we add some clay to make it as heavy as we want it. Heavy soil makes strong stems and your plants will stand a higher temperature and therefore produce more blooms without suffering in quality like they would in light soil. Not so much feeding or watering during hot weather is required either. You would be surprised, too, what a difference it makes in the color. The reds come more brilliant and the pinks come brighter and I guess even the whites come whiter.

But to get back to our planting. After we get our soil into proper condition and the ground outside is in good shape for digging (it having rained shortly previous) we set four men to work. One man who understands his business, to dig. Another careful man to pick up the plants, reduce the ball of earth to proper size, dip the roots into a pail of water and set them into flats. A third man to wheel them into the house. A fourth, and if necessary a fifth man, to plant them onto the bench. A force like this can work together from morning till night and no one needs to wait on anyone else if each attends to his business and a house is filled in short order. See that the man with the spade digs deep enough to get all the roots and see that the man who picks them up does not tear them off in reducing the ball. Great care is needed if the soil is stiff and comes up in lumps. Carnations should never be planted on such soil if it can be avoided and that is why a rather sandy loam is the best in the field, it does not cake. The man inside should keep right up with the digger so that the plants do not lie around and wilt and see that they set them in the soil just about as deep as they were in the field and water every time you have a few hundred planted, thoroughly syringing overhead several times each day.

When planting we leave a slight depression in the soil around the plant and in watering we fill it instead of flooding the whole bench. Water sparingly for a few days at the roots, but be careful not to allow the soil to get dry enough to cause suffering and keep up a damp atmosphere by sprinkling water on the walks and under the benches for several days.

Avoid draughts by keeping the ventilators a little lower than usual, but do not allow the atmosphere to become stuffy and foul. After three or four days you can increase the ventilation a few inches each day until after a week or so you have the ventilators up full height again. The mud shade you put on just before beginning the planting will do no harm for ten days or two weeks if the weather is bright and warm and if it rains within that time and washes it off clean you may have to put on your light shade again, but do not get your plants soft by keeping the house dark too long. After the plants are established they should have the full sun so that the growth will be well matured.

We do not put the supports in place until at least the first crop of weeds has been pulled and if the plants stand up well we wait until the second crop has also been taken out, after which the benches will remain tolerably clean until toward spring. But under no circumstances should you allow the plants to lie all over the bench, as we too often see, sometimes even up to Christmas time. How could you expect good blooms on straight stems? Good carnations cannot be grown that way.

Do not house any diseased or rusty plants as you will only be wasting your room when you might just as well plant something profitable; and besides, if it is a disease that will spread you are liable to get your whole stock infested. If a variety has much rust in the field you better leave it out, as the dampness necessary in getting the plants started on the benches will cause the rust to spread rapidly. The same may also be said of stem rot. If a plant has a branch died off don't take it in for the rest of the plant will go, too, in a short time and perhaps several more plants with it.

If you have plants shipped to you don't demand them on a certain day, but allow the shipper to judge as to the best time for digging. He should notify you before he ships them so you can be ready to plant them at once. Always remember that lifting the plants properly is of more importance than is planting on a certain date.

INJURED BOSTON FERNS.

I send sample of Boston fern fronds and wish you would tell me what caused them to look as though they were burned. It is true we are having hot weather, but we keep the houses as cool as we can and they are heavily shaded with whitewash. All the young leaves are turning the same way, and I cannot account for it. I see the other florists are bothered the same way.

C. P. M.

At the first glance it would appear as though the Boston ferns in question had been burned by ammonia arising from some fresh manure that had been used in the soil in which they were planted, but as "C. P. M." remarks that "the other florists are bothered the same way," it seems to dispose of that theory, for it is doubtful if all have used precisely the same compost.

It therefore seems most likely that this injury was really due to the excessive heat, for even though the houses were heavily shaded it would be absolutely necessary to ventilate freely, and the dry heated air thus admitted carried off the moisture from the pores of the leaves more rapidly than the roots could supply it. It is also possible that the plants became dry at the root, and one such drying under such trying atmospheric conditions would be quite enough to ruin the young growth of these ferns.

W. H. TAPLIN.

you would the ordinary annuals, shifting carefully does not hurt them, and for this purpose we scatter a few seeds over the surface of a 24-inch pot, thinning out to two or three of the strongest plants a little later and as soon as large enough shift into a 4 or 5-inch pot. You do not want a great many for Christmas but a few hundred sell well. For a long time they have to take the usual temperature, but later give them a cool house, say 45 at night, with the fullest light.

Cyclamen.

Be sure and do not neglect your cyclamen, no matter whether you have them in a frame or in a house. I believe for the average grower who has but a few that the house is the safest place. If tobacco stems are plentifully distributed amongst the pots it will help very much to keep them green fly. Don't be afraid to give them a good sprinkling every day or even twice a day, and don't let them suffer for want of shifting. Never let them get extremely dry, and shade during the brightest hours of the day.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Poinsettias.

It is some time since I have had anything to say about poinsettias, and I am somewhat of a crank on these. They really have been a paying plant with us for some years and I think should be largely sold in all large cities. Last year we found that many of the earliest propagated grew altogether too high to be desirable, some growing as high as six feet. This we could not very well account for. Do not use in your final potting, which won't be quite yet, too rich a soil, and pot very firmly. I have often said that they should have the lightest house you have. Nothing but the full blaze of the sun will do. With these conditions you have done all you could to keep them dwarf. For two or three years past the single plants have not been as much in demand as the pans. We began growing them in pans some four years ago and last year nearly every one who could afford it wanted a 10 or 12-inch pan.

Plants propagated now and even a month later are just what you want for this purpose. They root very readily during August, keeping the bed shaded and with copious waterings twice a day. To take them from the sand and put them into the pan is a little risky because one plant will grow much taller, perhaps, than another and in pans it is desirable to have them as nearly one height as possible. So we prefer to take them from the sand and pot in the usual way in 24-inch pots and then in transferring them later to the pans you can choose five or six plants, or whatever you use for the pan, all of one size and they will be likely to maintain the same corresponding growth. You often see these plants in a very miserable state about Christmas time; leafless and scraggy when they should be in perfection. One point in their culture I will repeat once more is they never want to have their roots disturbed by shifting within at least ten weeks of Christmas, and better three months.

Lilies.

Lilies are beginning to arrive. It seems there is going to be rather a scarcity of the Bermuda bulbs. I know of no better way than potting the 5 to 7 ones, getting them into a cool house until they get a start. We use a 5-inch pot for this size. Those you don't want quite as early can be placed out of doors. To prevent the soil from continually drying with those inside we put over an inch of sphagnum. This keeps the soil moist and I think is better for the bulbs. It is easily removed after they have made a start. Those outside we prefer to cover with spent hops and have in a position so that in case of very heavy rains we can cover with glass.

We have tried several different plans with the 7 to 9. A few years ago we kept the bulbs and the surface of the soil down two inches below the top of the pot. On removing to the greenhouse, say in November, we added an inch or inch and a half of well enriched soil, or in other words filled the pot up to the usual depth, and I am going back to that plan this year. For several years we have potted them in 4-inch pots to start with and on removing them to the greenhouse shifted them into the 6-inch for the flowering pot, but we have come to the conclusion that in the long run it is nothing saved in labor. This year we shall pot the large bulbs in their flowering pot at once and keep the bulb down as described above. Do not use too much manure with the composition you use for lilies and what you do let it be thoroughly rotten.

Mignonette.

We found last year that a few pots of mignonette sold remarkably well at Christmas. It is a very good time to sow it now. Although the mignonette is by no means an easy plant to transplant as

STEAM HEATING.

We have four greenhouses which we would like to heat with steam and would like to hear from some experienced man how to arrange the pipes to the best advantage.

Three houses are 29 x 185, 13 feet to ridge, 54 feet to gutter. They are connected houses, four 5-foot benches to a house. We wish to keep them at 60 degrees in zero weather.

One house is 29 x 128, 13 feet to ridge, 54 to gutter. This house we want to keep at 70 degrees. How large should the boiler be?

Chicago.

G. E.

For the heating of the three houses 29 feet wide by 185 feet long to 60 degrees and the one house 29 feet by 128 feet to 70 degrees on zero nights, I would suggest the use of a horizontal return tubular boiler having a capacity, as usually rated, of not less than thirty to thirty-five horse power; forty horse power would provide an economical and desirable surplus capacity.

The Ohio State Building at the Pan-American Exposition.

Water Lilies and Margin Planting at the Pan-American Exposition.

For the heating of the houses 29 x 185 feet to sixty degrees, he will need sixteen lines of one-inch pipe or thirteen lines of one and one-quarter inch pipes, or their equivalent, conveniently distributed below the benches, and for heating the shorter house to seventy degrees, twenty-five lines of one-inch or twenty lines of one and one-quarter inch pipes or their equivalent.

The sizes and arrangement of the mains will be determined by the location of boiler cellar and grades of house, depth of boiler below floor of greenhouse and other at present unknown conditions, as would also the definite arrangement of the heating coils.

HENRY W. GIBBONS.

PIPING FOR STEAM.

We are starting a range of five houses 18x100 feet, side walls 4 feet, 10 feet to ridge pole, permanent sash bars, and houses all connected, running north and south. How many 1 1/4-inch pipe should we have to maintain a temperature of 55 degrees? Will one 2-inch overhead steam pipe be enough for feeding all coils in a house of that width, etc., main steam pipe to run about 75 feet from boiler to first house?

Will the boiler be low enough if the ground in houses is on a level with top of boiler, not counting steam dome? The boiler is a tubular boiler with steam dome and is 28-horse power. Will that size heat that number of houses to advantage using soft coal and having a night man? What do you consider the best way of piping? Can the pipes be arranged with one valve for every two pipes or would it be better to use valves on all except one pipe on each side of the house?

L. S.

In answer to L. S. for the heating of five houses 18 x 100 feet, connected together on ridge and furrow plan, the boiler referred to as 28-horse power will have ample capacity for the work, and will heat one house additional, but with no surplus capacity.

Assuming the boiler to be at one corner of the range, I would advise a main flow from boiler to first house of 4 1/2-inch pipe, take out 2-inch main for first house and continue 4-inch to second with 2-inch outlet, then 3 1/2-inch to third house with 2-inch outlet, 3-inch with 2-inch outlet to fourth house and continue 2-inch to fifth house. The return mains starting at fifth house would be 1 1/2-inch increasing to 2-inch at fourth, 2 1/2-inch at third, 3-inch at second and continuing 3-inch past first to boiler.

If the top of the boiler is level with the ground line of greenhouses, it will answer, but go a foot deeper if you can. It is best to valve both ends of all piping except one circuit, so as to give perfect control.

Each house will require 8 lines of 1 1/4-inch pipes if a complete circuit is to be made, that is having each coil start from boiler end of house out to far end and back, but if a 2-inch overhead steam main is run from boiler end down hill to far end and returning through coils, only 7 lines of 1 1/4-inch pipe will be needed: we sometimes use only six in such cases, but it is better to be on the safe side and use seven.

HENRY W. GIBBONS.

SMALL PIPES FOR HOT WATER.

Is it advisable to use 1 1/4-inch pipe for hot water heating? If not, kindly give reason, and the proper size to put in.

Montana.

One and one-quarter inch wrought iron pipes may be used for water circulation on coils of seventy-five feet and under in length, using the ordinary open circulation system, and on coils up to one hundred and fifty feet in length under the pressure system, which is really a circulation of steam and water in combination.

In circulating through pipes of small diameter friction becomes excessive, and in order to overcome or counterbalance the check given to circulation by such friction, more energy must be created at boiler, either by having water leave boiler at a higher temperature, or by boiler placed at a greater depth below the circulating coils so as to give a greater distance of direct vertical fall to return main at the boiler.

For water circulation in ordinary commercial greenhouse practice I prefer pipe having an inside diameter of two inches.

HENRY W. GIBBONS.

PIPING FOR HOT WATER.

I herewith submit several propositions with accompanying diagrams, and desire to know which would be the most effective for hot water. In diagram No. 1 would the closed pipe (c) be better than the cylinder (a)? If cylinder were used, what would be the difference between a closed cylinder (a) and an open cylinder (b)?

Diagram No. 2. Should the flow pipe rise from e to h, or fall from f to h? Should the coil (d) be horizontal or perpendicular?

Is one large flow pipe more effective than several small ones? A. W. T.

In response to the inquiry of A. W. T., referring to his diagrams Nos. 1 and 2, and answering the questions in their regular order, I would say, I would give a preference to arrangement indicated in general by figure No. 1, with end connection C as being the most simple to construct, and avoiding all unnecessary friction, but with the addition of a supply and expansion tank at G, and air vents or cocks in upper elbows of pipes C. If connection A is used, the connections from the coil to cylinder or stand pipe A should have a diameter as large as the main connection from boiler to coil, and the standpipe should be not less than said connection in diameter, and, if A is open at top, it should have a diameter of about twice that of said connection, so as to prevent blowing out of water when firing hard. The height of A or its extension as indicated by B need be sufficient to accommodate the expanded water in the apparatus at its highest temperature, and such that the volume of this heated water, when its temperature becomes normal, or say fifty degrees, maintains a level in A above the coil. If cylinder B were left open, no air valves nor other feed or expansion tank would be required, but if closed, it should be provided with an air cock at top end, and a feed and expansion tank G would have to be provided as with arrangement C. In answer to the question referring to diagram No. 2, I would say the arrangements to be preferred are governed chiefly by matters of structural convenience. In coils, I prefer to distribute the flow through several pipes rather than in one large pipe to far end of coil, but for main supply pipes from boiler one large pipe is preferable as it has a tendency to prevent short circuits from boiler and back.

To be followed by a discussion by Messrs. C. W. Ward, E. Buettner, E. M. Wood, II. B. Beatty, and others.

The Question Box.

The Question Box will be, as heretofore, an interesting feature of the meetings. Members are requested to forward inquiries intended for the box to the secretary previous to the meeting, when practicable, so that they may appear in the regular program.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

Preliminary Premium List.

The next annual meeting and exhibition will be held in Indianapolis, Ind., Feb. 20 and 21, 1902. To secure a fare and one-third for this meeting there must be an attendance of 100 or over paying railroad fare, so that members will consult their own interests by getting a good attendance. Indianapolis is convenient of access to all of the growers who supply Chicago and St. Louis, which will make this meeting an especially good one for the display of seedlings.

There will be a meeting held in Buffalo, N. Y., in conjunction with the meeting of the S. A. F., for the perfecting of arrangements for the annual meeting. This meeting will be held at 4 p. m., Aug. 7, and all members of the society present are invited to attend.

CHICAGO TO BUFFALO.

The Chicago Florists' Club transportation committee has arranged with the Wabash railway for a special train to Buffalo for the convention of the Society of American Florists, August 6 to 10.

The train will leave Monday, August 5, at 4 p. m. and will reach Buffalo at 7:30 Tuesday morning. The committee is assured of an unusually well appointed special train. The rate will be $13 for the round trip, and less should there be any cut in rates by the railroads for that week. The sleeping car fare will be $3 a berth each way. An excellent dining car service is assured.

Florists in the west and northwest are cordially invited to travel with the Chicago party.

Berths may be reserved by addressing any member of the committee as below:

- G. L. GRANT,
334 Dearborn street.
- P. J. HAUSWIRTH,
223 Michigan avenue.
- E. F. WINTERSON,
45 Wabash avenue.

GUNNERAS.

In outdoor planting there are certain locations in which a single specimen of some bold foliated plant is the most effective to use and in such a place one of the gunneras may provide just the effect needed.

These plants are among the largest of perennial heros, producing a crown of gigantic leaves that bear some resemblance to those of the rhubarb.

The inflorescence of gunnera is not specially striking, the small flowers being crowded together in a cone-like mass that is thrown up on a stout stem to a height of three or four feet and except it be for the purpose of seed-bearing it is probably better to remove the flower stems before the flowers are open and thus to throw the strength of the plant into the foliage.

Rich, moist soil is that best adapted for growing gunneras, and out of the ten or more species that are known to botanists there are two that are specially suited for lawn ornamentation, namely, G. manicata and G. scabra. Of these the first named is the larger and better species, and under favorable conditions throws up massive leaves that are frequently five or six feet in diameter, and are said to occasionally reach the tremendous dimensions of ten (10) feet diameter.

Such leaves cannot fail to attract attention and the noble appearance of a specimen of this species is well shown in our illustration which is reproduced from the London "Garden." This picture also gives us a hint in regard to location, for although the gunneras should have full exposure to sunshine, yet it is best for them to have such a shelter from violent winds as would be provided by the background of trees, as otherwise the large leaves of the gunnera may be torn or broken.

The second species to which we have referred, G. scabra (or G. chilense), resembles the first in general character, but is a smaller grower and less prickly in the leaf stalks than G. manicata, the flowers also being of a different color.

These two species are hardy at least as far north as Boston and possibly somewhat beyond that point, but the crowns of the plants should be protected by a good covering of leaves, this covering being put in place about Dec. 1, or at the beginning of severe weather.

W. H. TAPLIN.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—Charles W. White, formerly a prominent florist, and who retired from business about eight years ago, died July 17, aged 73 years.

OUR Convention Number will be issued next week and will contain a report of the Buffalo convention.

BUFFALO.

Come to the Convention.

There has been nothing going on of any special moment for the past week and a few of the florists now have time to visit the races across the river. Too bad that we are too busy to join them. It is a strange thing that florists seem to have a fair share of the sporting element in their make-up and Buffalo men are not the only ones that we have known who have rather a taste for the race track.

We are all bustling now in preparation for the great week which starts in on Tuesday next, and I trust nothing will be left undone. I hope they all have taken advantage of what we have done by endeavoring to look out comfortable quarters for every one. There are, as I have before said, any amount of beautiful homes ready to receive you at a moderate price, if you will only avail yourself of the opportunity. But too many have neglected to do this and are liable to find themselves in undesirable quarters. Trust to the florists, even if you have made no arrangements up to date, and we will find you good homes.

The firm of Neubeck & Myers have dissolved, Mr. Myers retiring and Louis H. Neubeck carrying on the business.

As you will see by the list of prizes published in the trade papers last week, there is a good lot to compete for and several more prizes have been added. I would say to the shooters, or all who intend to participate in the shooting, bring your guns. In my opinion no one should shoot unless they can shoot. You can do very little harm on the bowling alley and you can trundle down a ball in some sort of shape, but it is entirely different to shoot, and unless a man knows how to handle a gun he should forgo any attempt to shoot, for it is dangerous sport.

There has been a request from some cities that the day of the bowling should be altered, but this it is now impossible to do. It was not the wish of the local men that the bowling should be set down for Saturday. It was decided by the executive committee, and I trust that all our rivals will take that view of it, as it is the truthful one. We will begin promptly in the morning and I hope that the league represented by the captains of the various clubs will vote to let a team bowl off their three games consecutively, so that they can if they wish get away. Keeping a team waiting for the third game is nonsense.

As these will be the last words I can say to you before you come I trust that none of you will stop home with the idea that Buffalo is going to be crowded or that accommodations will be difficult to get or expensive, for none of these conditions exist. Those who have not seen the Pan-American and will not be able to come later should all come for I am certain that they will be more than gratified, and I will also add as a last reminder, that when you take the cars, either the Elmwood, Main and Forest, or Michigan car, be sure to get off either at the Lincoln Parkway or Elmwood Gate. Walk through the Rose Garden to the Triumphal Causeway and take in the Grand Court on your arrival and you never can be disappointed. Leave the Midway until you have seen the beautiful.

The trade exhibit is going to be well worth seeing this year.

We have had a fair amount of horticultural visitors this week. Paul Richter, of the Henry F. Michell firm; L. H. Maas, of St. Louis; C. J. Ohmer, of Cincinnati; J. W. C. Deake, and Mrs. J. B. Deake, of Asheville, N. C. This lady and gentleman are well known to all attendants of the conventions and are an advance guard. They have been very loyal to our society and have come a long distance every year wherever the convention was held, and they have come with the good and laudable purpose of taking the convention back to Asheville next year. Other visitors were W. G. Williams, of the Dayton Floral Company, of Dayton, Ohio, and J. R. Goldman, of Middletown, Ohio.

Pan-American Exposition.

It seems hardly necessary to say any more about the attractions we have at the Pan-American, for you will all be here within a few days and see and judge for yourselves, so I will not attempt to elaborate on any of the exhibits. The sweet pea show which opened on July 23 was slightly disappointing in the number of exhibits, many intending exhibitors writing to us to say that the extraordinary hot weather had ruined their flowers; still, there were several collections of great merit. W. Atlee Burpee put up a very fine table consisting of about seventy-five vases, and I am glad to say they are still keeping it up.

The grandest flowers, both in texture, length of stem, purity of color and in the great variety shown, were shown by Mr. Charles Larrowe, of Coshocton, and Mr. E. A. Higgins, of Avoca, N. Y. They are both amateurs, but enthusiasts on the sweet pea and their flowers were simply magnificent. Mr. Larrowe had rather the best and captured a majority of the premiums. It might be interesting to know the varieties which we thought the most beautiful: Prima Donna, Lovely, Sadie Burpee, Emily Henderson, Othello, America, Aurora, Lady Grisell Hamilton, Prince of Wales, Mae of Honor, Gorgeous, Hon. H. Bonviver, Mrs. Eckford, Salopian. There were also shown many other beautiful varieties, some of Eckford's newest only sent out this spring. Mr. Higgins has taken sincere interest in our sweet pea show for a long time and we thank both him and Mr. Larrowe for their presence and the splendid show they put up.

Other exhibitors were Henry A. Dreer, James Vick's Sons, Charles C. Fritts, of Titusville, another amateur, who sent a splendid collection. When we have more amateurs throughout the country take hold of flowers as a hobby and grow them to such perfection as these peas it will be a sure and gratifying advance of horticulture in this country.

Visitors to the convention will have an opportunity to see a magnificent collection of gladioli. The exhibit opens on Aug. 6. We expect flowers from many of the largest growers of the country. Mr. H. H. Groff, of Simcoe, Ontario, began a week ago to send flowers from his magnificent collection and we are now receiving daily some 500 spikes. They occupy tables in the center of the large Horticulture Building. Mr. John A. Campbell, who represents Mr. Groff, is here in charge and has brought with him many unnamed seedlings of surpassing beauty. It will be impossible to begin to describe these gladioli. I hope you will all see them and by the time you are here there will be many thousand spikes.

Buffalo has been visited by so many copious rains that the grounds at the Pan-American and our avenues will look at their very best. Come one, come all.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

There are not nearly enough flowers to go around. Not very much business, but more could be created if the stock could be had; another week should increase the supply. Roses are becoming a little more plentiful; Kaisericus are the likeliest looking variety seen. The first new crop of Beauties has arrived; they are only fair. Asters are more plentiful; 50 cents to $1.50 per 100 is the price; a few choice flowers command $2. Achillea, pyrethrum, candy-tuft and phlox find ready sale at fair prices, there being much funeral work about. Colchess, of West Philadelphia, is sending in some good sweet peas to William J. Moore which bring 35 cents per 100. Pond lilies are an acceptable addition to the stock offered. Rudolph Bingham, of Wellwood, and Amos Elbert, of Ashland, are the shippers; the former to Edward Reid; the latter to S. S. Pennock. The white pond lilies are worth about 50 cents per 100. Holly-hocks are nearly over. George M. Moss is handling some nice smilax that brings 15 cents.

To Buffalo.

The Philadelphia Club and friends will leave Reading Terminal, 12th and Market streets, in special car attached to the 10:30 a. m. train on Monday, August 5, scheduled to arrive in Buffalo at 9:20 p. m. Refreshments will be provided on train. The fare will be one and one-third rate on the certificate plan, $9.25 to be paid at starting point, and return trip costing one-third, making a total of $12.35. This includes stop-over privileges at Watkins Glen on return.

Various Items.

Henry A. Dreer Company reports an increase in the demand for perennials. They are now sending out quite a lot of some of the perennials. Their Harris-his have arrived in good shape. Indications point to a short crop this season.

Joseph Kift & Son have an interesting window full of tiny cacti in specially made pot of minute size.

Robert Scott & Son are sending in some Kaisericus to S. S. Pennock.

A fungus or callous growth has attacked some of the cheaper French grown stocks sent here for grafting. The growth is of walnut size, at the base of the stems, and entirely checks growth.

Two commission cases. First, a shipment of carnations received Monday afternoon; 35 cents more could have been realized had the flowers arrived early in the morning. Second, a basket of miscellaneous flowers with lilies laid on top was sent by express; lilies ruined when basket was opened; they would have brought a good price if properly packed in a suitable box. Moral—Keep in touch with your commission man.

It is a curious fact that the H. A. Dreer Company now control all the stock in this country of the two most striking novelties in the plant line today—Pandanus Sanderii and Gerbera Jamesonii. Pandanus Sanderii has, not long since, been described in these columns; Gerbera Jamesonii called the Transvaal Daisy has been creating much interest of late; it is dwarf in habit, not attaining a height of over 8 or 10 inches, but it throws up a profusion of flowers on long stems which gives a height of about 18 inches to the plant when in bloom. Here is the strong point of the Transvaal daisy—it is almost never out of bloom after it reaches maturity. George D. Clark, to whom I am indebted for the facts regarding this plant, states that a 4-year-old plant of the Transvaal daisy was in bud or bloom for three years right along; certainly a remarkable instance of long and continuous blooming. The chief attraction about the daisy is the color of the flowers and their size; under favorable conditions the blooms are of a bright scarlet and measure 4 inches across. The plant is half hardy and may prove a valuable acquisition as a cut flower. Plants can now be seen growing in the frames at Riverton. The young stock will be offered January 1.

Oddly enough this daisy was brought into competition with Pandanus Sanderii in the class for the best novelty at the meeting of the New York Horticultural Society last May. The daisy won the $50 prize. The comparison seems a little absurd.

By an unhappy error the name of Joseph Bevis & Son was spelled wrong last week.

The bowling team to represent Philadelphia at Buffalo will consist of Messrs. Moss, Conker, Kift, Anderson, Gilson and Westcott, with Messrs. Starkey and Graham as substitutes.

Another Old Saw.

If you wish for to shine
In the pigeon shooting line

As a blue rock smasher rare,
You must use the language bad
Of a very sporty lad
And fling it every where.
Wear a fancy cap or more so,
Hang all colors round your torso.
Like a barber's pole or plaid,
Don't go in for beauty.
To be startling is your duty
If shooting you try my lad.
And every one will say
As you wander along your way
"Why this easy bird, no one
Will outshoot the great J. E.
In the Buffalo affray."

Bedding at Girard College.

The very best bedding in or near this city today is to be found at Girard College. The bedding is quite extensive, the plants well grown and the ideas are practical and skillfully executed. I went to see the college grounds and greenhouses one morning this week. I went especially to see the superintendent, fancy caladiums, the whole being partly shaded by trees. An English visitor was much pleased with this bed, which Mr. Huster thinks would be improved by the use of Phoenix rupicola instead of Seafortia. Another effective tropical bed was planted with Pandanus Veitchii mixed with Draena Sanderiana, the edging being formed of Acalypha tricolor, then peperomia and Tradescantia discolor, an old timer, rarely seen now. The best varieties of cannas noted were Columbia, Madame Crozy, Allemania and the Duke of Marlborough.

The varieties of small plants used in the carpet beds are Alternanthera aurea, A. rosea, A. brilliantissima and a deep colored one secured from Dreer's under a number (name unknown), Echeveria secunda glauca, E. Rosetti, more compact than the former; Sedum carnea and Crassula aurea. Sanchezia spectabilis urs bringing as high as $5 and $6. Asters average very poor in quality, but there is an occasional batch of good ones and these move very well at $2. The poorest are unsalable. Good smilax is scarce and in brisk demand.

To Buffalo.

The Florists' Club's special train to Buffalo is filling up fast and the party will be a large one. The train will leave Dearborn station (Wabash railway) at 4 p. m. Monday, Aug. 5. See announcement elsewhere in this issue.

Various Items.

Several growers will begin housing carnations next week. The recent heavy rains have made conditions favorable. Ethel Crocker has shown up well as a summer bloomer outside. First class blooms of this variety from outside plants are now bringing $1.50 per 100.

C. M. Dickinson has returned from his fishing and hunting trip.

The bowling team to represent Chicago at Buffalo, consisting of George Asmus, E. F. Winterson, P. J. Hauswirth, John Degnan, F. Stollery, and Joseph Forster, played three practice games last Tuesday evening. A scrub team composed of C. Balluff, G. L. Grant, F. Matti, C. W. Scott, G. Stollery and F. Steeres played against them just to make things interesting, and there was much laughter and applause when the scrubs won out in one of the games. The regular team will play another set of practice games next Friday evening.

We still hear echoes from the very successful picnic given by the Florists' Club last week, and reported in our last issue.

Recent visitors: R. Nicholson, of the Texas Seed & Floral Company, Dallas, Tex.; E. W. Marland, of Alexandria Floral Company, Alexandria, Ind.; Geo. Souster, Elgin, Ill.; F. C. Smith, Ashland, Wis.

Charley Balluff and Ed. Winterson Dispensing Prescriptions at the Picnic of the Chicago Florists' Club Last Week.

George Huster, whose ability has here found a field.

The principal beds at Girard College are laid out between the main building and the south entrance. They consist of two groups lying on each side of a broad walk. These groups are formed of twenty or more beds cut out of the turf and are identical in design. In the center of each group is a raised circular bed seventy-five feet in circumference containing about 10,000 plants. A handsome bank of crotons, twenty-five varieties, form the center; around this is a band of Achyranthus Lindeni; from this to the edge slopes a star pattern of alternanthera and echeverias. Around this central bed are laid out other beds of various shapes planted chiefly with crotons and geraniums. The crotons were all young plants, brilliantly colored. An effective bed planted with four varieties contained Baron James de Rothschild in the center, Day Spring, Weismann and Queen Victoria in the order named. In geraniums S. A. Nutt is the best crimson; other reliable varieties are Le Pilote, scarlet; Mrs. Deering, pale pink; Madame Thibaut, purplish pink; Mrs. Parker, which has replaced Mountain of Snow as a variegated border, and Madame Sallerai, variegated foliage.

There are many other handsome beds, the most striking being one planted with ten feet high Seafortia elegans in such a way as to shade a great variety of makes a fine edging for one of the Pandanus Veitchii beds. Two thousand five hundred crotons are grown, all young plants as before mentioned, exceptionally well colored. I think they would prove a revelation to many of our growers. About thirty varieties of cacti are seen here. Cotyledon coryphyllum is used with the echeverias in edging the cacti bed. It is thought a good thing, but rather a slow grower. PHIL.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Market conditions are about the same as last week. Shipping trade holds up well for the season and there is still a shortage in roses and carnations, especially white. Inside carnations are pretty well burnt up and the outside plants are not yet producing enough to fully meet the demand. Recent heavy rain and cooler weather have helped the latter materially, though, and a better supply is expected very soon. The best of the roses (and the best are pretty poor) go at $3 to $5, with the poorest at $1 to $2. Some extra good Golden Gates have brought as high as $6. In carnations the best outdoor blooms range from $1.25 to $1.50, while ordinary stock brings from 50 cents to $1.

Gladioli are now much in evidence and move fairly well at $2.50 to $4, with some selected spikes of light col-

NEW YORK.

Are you going to Buffalo? is the question of the day, and at this writing the indications are that there will be a great crowd of New Yorkers at the convention. The special train promises to be the conveyor of a very jolly party, though a few will travel by other routes.

Business is summery and stock is very scarce, especially roses and carnations, which bring at times whatever is asked. There is a continuous chase after the few Victorias coming in.

Thorley is changing the interior of his Broadway store; it will be a beauty when finished. Kuhn has built a nice conservatory in the rear of his store. Stump keeps adding to his place by taking in next doors. Traendly has built an office in the rear of his store. Many are preparing with paint brush or axe for the far away rush time.

Lucatos' store was sold out by the public administrator on Thursday. A Greek bought it in—$350 for fixtures and $300 for good will and lease till next May. Lucatos died, leaving many debts among the trade.

The first large shipment of Harrisitis landed from Bermuda by the Trinidad on the 23d, fully two weeks behind the usual time, and dealers inform us that notwithstanding all the arguments against early shipments, growers have been clamoring for bulbs; in a few cases orders were countermanded because bulbs could not be delivered early in July. The ship's manifest gives the following list: Baker & Dick, 109 cases; T. D. Cross-land, 192 cases; Chicas & Boddington, 85 cases; J. W. Hampton, Jr. & Co., 67; Hageman & Meyer, 96; J. Kempe, 219; Merchants' Despatch, 27; A. E. Outerbridge, 221; F. R. Pierson, 7; C. B. Richard & Co., 1,191; J. M. Theburn & Co., 49; J. C. Vaughan, 307; Order, 139. So far we have heard only that the bulbs are in good condition. Another shipment is expected Aug. 6.

At this writing we are informed that William Plumb, ex-president of the New York Florists' Club, is in St. Vincent's Hospital suffering from appendicitis. We sincerely hope he will soon be well again. William Donohue and William Sampson, of Thomas Young, Jr.'s, establishment, are away among the fishes. To give a list of those on vacation would require a full page; more will join the crowd next week.

J. Austin Shaw took a midnight sail to Boston last week in order to perfect his ode to the florists which he promises to give us on the way to Buffalo.

The greatest excitement prevails among as soon as he sees this extrema development of the class of plants in which he is so much interested. The paper unfortunately fails to state what the artist ate or drank the night before he produced this masterpiece.

BOSTON.

Various Items.

All quiet along the "lordly Charles;" never more so in the floral business. Material is poor and not plentiful. In fact, prices are struggling upward just a bit but are yet very low.

Vacationists are both coming and going. None of them seems to affect business unless it be in the case of Mr. Walsh, of the Co-operative market, who, two weeks off, makes the market open at 6:30 the mornings of the first half of August instead of 6 a. m.

Before Thos. F. Galvin built his palatial Back Bay establishment several small attempts had been made unsuccessfully in that section, consequently much discussion ensued amongst the craft as to the wisdom and probable failure of his his own landlord. If he has an enemy in the world it must be one or two he ought to be proud of and I feel safe in extending congratulations from every one with hopes for a great impetus to his pink and aster business.

It is said to also be obliged to relate the tale of woe that Fate decrees Mr. Houghton, of Houghton & Clark. He seems to stand clear at the foot of the class in hard luck. In exuberance of spirits he went to Crescent Beach to rusticate and his first rustication consisted of stepping on a rolling stone and badly spraining an ankle. "Rolling stones gather no moss" but this does not destroy all their sport. The next time Mr. Houghton entered his store he excited great waves of heart-felt sympathy by limping in with a cane and dragging along a foot that looked like a good healthy case of the gout. Then he went back to the Beach and thought perhaps a whirl in one of those whirly-go-round cars might revive his faded spirits, which was where he made another mistake. The thing went so fast and dodged around at such a rate it threw him down on the floor of the car striking his eye on a corner so that in a few minutes he resembled the winning cat in a four-cornered fight. He still wears the patent foot appendage and has the eye most elegantly decorated. Never you mind, Houghton, the good do die young but that is no reason why you should not live a thousand years.

ST. LOUIS.

The Trip to Buffalo.

Arrangements have been completed for the trip to Buffalo over the Big Four. The party, numbering about 15 or 20, will leave Sunday night, August 4 and arrive in Buffalo Monday noon. The ticket for the round trip from St. Louis to Buffalo and return, via this route, will cost $19.25 and it is hoped that this, the lowest possible rate, together with the many inducements offered on the way and at Buffalo, will bring out a large delegation. Those who are going should apply at once to J. J. Beneke, 1220 Olive street, in order to secure accommodations on our special car which will run through without change.

Bowling at Buffalo.

It may be that after all St. Louis will be represented in the bowling tournament at Buffalo; if not as a team it will surely be in the individual class. Among the bowlers who will be on hand are: C. A. Kuehn, A. Y. Ellison, J. J. Beneke, F. C. Weber and C. C. Sanders. Should one more make up his mind to go we will have a team; if not, all of the above will roll in the individual class. The first three named are out with a challenge to roll any three florist bowlers from one city any time during the convention; this is open to any city.

Various Items.

We are still looking for that welcome rain which has been promised us by the weather man to put an end to the most protracted drought that has been known here for years. The condition of the crops can be better imagined than described. Outdoor flowers, shrubbery, ornamental trees and grass in the parks have suffered much and many have died.

There is no use talking business under these conditions. Just now there is plen-

CARNIVOROUS PLANTS.

Every year the April 1 issue of Moeller's Deutsche Gaerener-Zeitung is devoted to humorous views of horticultural matters, and the accompanying engraving is reproduced from the last one. We anticipate an interesting communication from Mr. W. R. Smith, of Washington, bold stroke which has hardly yet ceased. There is no record of Mr. Galvin having said a word one way or the other until now, when he speaks forcibly, to the point and without opening his mouth. He quietly contracts for an addition to the place which doubles its present vast capacity for doing business.

In these days of general distress to the average grower it is very refreshing to hear of one who seems to have struck a genuine vein of luck. If Paul Richardson were not a grand good fellow I would want him lynched for stealing a march on the rest of us. A couple of years ago he went out to Needham and rented a twenty-four acre farm with 16,000 feet of glass and other buildings which have been burned since. This property is taxed upon a basis of $12,500 and is considered a very safe thing at $10,000. The banks foreclosed upon the owner the other day about a little matter of $7,300 and sold at auction. Paul went in with the field against him. The rest ran the figures up to the $7,300 so Paul chipped in only $10 more and becomes ty of funeral work; but for the lack of stock a great many orders have to be made up of cape flowers and in some cases the orders are refused. Our three wholesale men are not getting in enough flowers to supply one-half of the demand and the few that come in are not of even the usual second quality. The prices for this second quality stock is about what we used to pay for the first quality at this season of the year. Carnations that bring a cent are hardly fit to use in work of any kind; the same can be said of the roses. The only good looking rose that comes in is the Kaiserin and this is small. Prices run from $2 to $4 per 100. The outdoor flowers, such as asters and tuberos stalks, are not of the best and show the effects of the heat and dry weather very much.

Carnation growers are getting ready to loose their plants and most of them report that the stock is looking better than they expected under the present dry spell. Mr. Durnford at Central, whose stock is much in demand, is building a few new houses all for carnations. Mr. Steidle, of the same place, also has some fine stock which is looking well. The Udes, Richter, Winter and Berdan, at Kirkwood, all carnation growers, have fine looking plants and are looking forward to a good season.

LAST CALL for advs. for our Convention Number, to be issued next week.

CINCINNATI.

Stock Scarce.

To say that the temperature is between 95 and 100 at noon every day is about all that is necessary to say regarding trade conditions in this vicinity—it is easy to guess the rest. There is scarcely any stock that is fit to sell.

The asters that are coming in are of a most inferior grade, being very small and short-stemmed, still they bring $1 per 100, owing to the scarcity of stock in general. Carnations in the field are at a standstill and the plants to be housed this fall will be small in size. Chrysanthemums, too, are showing the effects of the long dry spell and consequently they will be late in coming in this fall. This is to be regretted, as the arrival of the chrysanthemum almost always marks the beginning of our fall and winter trade.

Various Notes.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Bayersdorfer, of Philadelphia, were in this city during the past week on a pleasure trip through the country. Their next stop is to be Pittsburgh.

A severe hail storm, together with a small cyclone, was an unwelcome visitor to some of the boys. George & Allan are out several hundred panes of glass. Over the river in Kentucky the storm played havoc with several growers and truck gardeners. Mr. Thomas, Dick Schmidt, Pfeiffer's Sons and John Fries were the heaviest losers. But the loss in every case is slight.

George Murphy is receiving congratulations on all sides. It's a girl and both mother and baby are doing nicely.

To the fact that Buffalo is an ideal city in which to hold the S. A. F. convention the writer can bear witness. Having just returned from that much-blessed city which, in some inexplicable way, must be sheltered from the direct rays of the sun, for during my entire stay the weather was delightful. A cool lake breeze was sure to be in evidence about supper time and I know of no tonic that is more invigorating or more refreshing than it.

Now I don't want the reader to think that I am saying this in order to advertise Buffalo. It doesn't need it. But I do want to advertise the fact that the S. A. F. holds its convention in this well chosen spot.

Mr. W. A. Adams, at the head of the hotel committee, is the right man in the right place and I advise all those who intend to go to Buffalo to correspond with him, stating about what they want in the way of rooms, etc., and they will not be disappointed in his selection.

You have read a great deal concerning the exposition in THE REVIEW and there is little more that I can add. The flower beds and gardening are fine and every where the handiwork of Mr. Scott is in evidence. The man whose articles and books on floriculture have done so much to help along the struggling florist has been given a great chance to show his ability and he has been more than equal to the task.

By all means you should see the illumination of the buildings by nearly half a million of electric lights. I think it is the grandest and most impressive scene ever contrived by man, and one which, having been seen, will live forever in your mind.

Messrs. J. A. Peterson and Max Rudolph leave for Buffalo this week.

C. J. OHLER.

"FRILLED" TUBEROS BEGONIAS.

This is a new strain of tuberos begonias that originated with W. Pfizer, Stuttgart, Germany, who states that it is the result of continuous and careful crossings. The picture, which is reproduced from a drawing, is certainly an attractive one and indicates that this new strain is worthy of a trial at least.

SAN FRANCISCO.

Various Notes.

Business has been very quiet of late and will likely remain so for some time to come. The Epworth Leaguers are holding a convention in our city; but, so far as the florist is concerned, the stir affects him but slightly, the Leaguers being on their knees most of the time.

Roses are not first class in quality, but are equal to demand. Carnations are fine and plentiful. Asters are in market but the flowers are small and short stemmed. All other kinds of stock is in abundance and prices remain low on everything.

Clark Bros., Fruitvale, are putting up two houses 16x165 for roses.

T. Simmonds, of the same place, is building a range of rose houses at his new place on Central avenue.

F. A. Abi, South Berkeley, will erect two houses 16x75 for American Beauties. Mr. Abi has been very successful with this rose.

J. Cook, East Berkeley, has finished planting 600 American Beauties.

J. Gilmore, Elmhurst, is at work on two houses, 12x400 each. In one he will grow roses and in the other Portia and Scott carnations. Jack will not tackle fancies yet a while. His roses have started into splendid growth.

H. S. Sanborn, Oakland, is busy with one house 12x50 for pot plants.

F. A. Miller, Hayes street, has opened a new store at 1561 Market street.

Domoto Bros., Fruitvale, are building a carnation house 25x150.

A. Frommiller, Elmhurst, has armed himself with a new Atlas boiler.

Peter Nickelson, San Lorenzo, is busy putting in a cement boiler pit, into which will be placed a new 20 H. P. Atlas boiler. The roses at this place have not yet been started into growth.

J. N.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Trade Conditions.

Roses and carnations are very scarce and the few obtainable are of very poor quality. No really good material is to be found in this market. The extreme heat has simply cooked everything. We have had the longest spell of tropical heat ever known in this section, but, as it to make it more endurable, it has been accompanied by heavy rains, the heaviest in years. Some carnation fields have been under water so long that the plants are ruined.

The most profitable flower just now, for the retailers, is swainsonia, it being especially valuable in funeral work. No florist should be without a good sized bench of this profitable summer flower. Ordinary retail trade is barely worth mentioning aside from funeral work of which there is plenty. The scorching weather having burned up the flowers all around the country, dependence has been placed on the grower; this has made shipping very active.

Prices: Roses, $1 per doz. Carnations and swainsonia, 25 cents per doz. Beauties, when there are any, bring $2 and $2.50 per doz.

Various Items.

Rose and violet planting is now about over. The hot weather was very severe on violets which, however, are looking fine since the last heavy rains.

The topic of conversation exciting the most interest is the convention of the S. A. F. It has not yet been decided whether we will go by boat or rail, the latter route, being quicker, may win out. Those going, as far as heard from, are: Henry Smith, Eli Cross, Alfred Hannah, Chas. Chadwick, James Schols and wife, Geo. F. Crabb, wife and son, and Wencel Cukerski, superintendent of parks.

The Hills Floral Co. are building several new rose and carnation houses; Henry Smith, one new house; Paul Goebel one new house for bedding stock. The Wealthy Avo Floral Co., one new house and rebuilding one rose house, and James Schols is rebuilding three houses and giving all a thorough overhauling. Jean Davis, a lettuce grower of prominence has rebuilt his entire plant. G. F. C.

WASHINGTON.

Business is dead and no one can truly understand what that means in Washington till they see for themselves.

Loose is about the only real busy man in town. He is hustling the carpenters, painters and electricians and when he gets through Washington will have as fine a floral establishment as can be found anywhere. The entire store is done in white and gold and is studded with electric lights. His ice box is a beauty, something on the order of that in Thorley's Fifth Avenue store. The windows on 13th and F Streets take in the entire store. He expects to open in a few weeks.

One florist has a card in the window announcing that $5 funeral designs can now be had for $2.

About fifteen of the craft here will attend the Buffalo convention, going with the Baltimore club who will have special cars.

Wm. Gude leaves Saturday for Europe. Mr. Haase, formerly with Loose, has taken a position with the Gudes.

There is some whispering of a new branch store up town when the snow flies.

Z. D. Blackstone is on a week's outing down the Potomac. BARON.

JOLLET, ILL.—The J. D. Thompson Company has been organized with a capital stock of $40,000. John Lambert and Fred P. Story are the largest stockholders, each having $10,000. The business of the company is to grow, handle, sell, market and deal in flowers, plants, greenhouse supplies and horticultural supplies and produce of all kinds. The first board of directors consists of John Lambert, W. M. Cochrane, J. D. Thompson, Adam Groth and E. E. Howard.

LOOMIS, CAL.—Mr. A. Mitting, formerly manager of the Morris Floral Co., Morris, Ill., is now located here and will grow carnations, pansies and Asparagus plumosus nanus.

A CONVENTION JINGLE.

Mr. J. Austin Shaw, the "Brooklyn Bard," has dashed off a few convention verses and has favored us with a copy. Following are a few selections:

As cheering and refreshing
As a green oasis can be
In the Desert of Sahara,
And a fountain, too, of blessing,
Such as can feed other mortals,
Is our President O'Mara.

An encyclopedia human,
Dignified, suave and tender,
Lacking only, as a true man,
Some one of the female gender—
So let us hope in 1902
There'll be a Mrs. O'Mara too!

For just about a generation
Our secretary's held his station,
I think 'twere well to make it last Until his soul's to glory passed,
And if he's careful now and thrifty
That oughtn't to be 'till 1905!

'Tis a comforting thing to be able to know
Just where every dollar we "rough up" will go,
And to feel every night when we turn in to sleep
That exactly the "surplus" will faithfully keep,
He's a treasurer true and we think he will do
And I vote we retain him in office, don't you?

Dear Father Smith, the Charter is your baby;
The S. A. F. O. H.—"Papa" will call you, Full many an offspring you have fathered maybe.

But do not let your progeny spall you.
We all your children are and love you dearly,
I hope you realize our meaning clearly,
In this bright world we trust you'll always stay.

Three cheers for "Father Smith." Hurrah!
A household word is his honored name
From the Golden Gate to Faree and the Hague,
And all of us crown him with glory and fame,
Our "silver tongued" orator, Robert Craig.

When the "Hall of Fame" is built
And its walls with gold are gilt
And the honored names of horticulture
On its tablets glow,
I am confident you'll see,
We'll perhaps not nor you me,
But I'll guarantee the name of generous
E. M. Wood will go.

Where the "barkers" loudest holler,
Where "fast and furious" is the fan,
You can bet your bottom dollar
You will find Ed. Winterston

He will "own" the Streets of Cairo,
Heard the Lions in their cages,
Try to buy the wives of Pharaoh,
Caring not to ask their ages,
But there's one thing—let him go it—
He'll not find, sir, if I know it,
That's a modern Turkish bath and the chance to kill a poet.

You may go from here to Paris
And search Ireland if you will,
But another "Deacon" Harris
You'll be looking after still,
Just as young as he used to be,
Bowling and fishing and shooting with skill,
He's found the "Elixir," it seems to me,
May he reach a hundred—we think he will.

I wonder if Carmody's hinges have rusted, or most, if not all, of his rollers have busted
There certainly isn't much else but heat,
And I fear his old friend with the cloven feet
Has discarded his hinges and changed the door
And respectable weather we'll see no more
But while we have sized it's a comfort to me
That sooner or later, he'll roast J. D.!

BETTER RESULTS.

COMPLETELY SOLD OUT.

Please discontinue my classified adv., as I am completely sold out of chrysanthemums, in fact could have sold three times what I had through your adv.—H. D. DARLINGTON, Flushing, N. Y.

A GOOD THING.

The classified ads. are a good thing. It is easy to find just what is wanted, and I think it is only a matter of a little time before people generally will realize this.—S. M. HARRISON, Danville, Ky.

FIVE TIMES AS MANY.

I spent $2 in the classified columns of the REVIEW and as a result sold five times as many plants as I did through $25 worth of advertising in another paper. This is experience that can't be gaisnaid.—G. P. MOORE, Ocean City, N. J.

A WIDE CIRCULATION.

Your paper appears to me to pay as well if not better than either of the others and to have a wide circulation.—JOHN H. LEY, Good Hope, D. C.

GOOD RETURNS.

We have been very well pleased with the advs. we have had in the REVIEW, as they have given us good returns.—ROBERT MANN, Lansing, Mich.

THE BEST.

We consider the REVIEW the best advertising medium and the newest paper published for the trade.—GEO. M. KELLOGG, Pleasant Hill, Mo.

A VALUABLE ASSISTANT.

I find the REVIEW a valuable assistant and an excellent advertising medium.—JOHN NORDINE, Florist for JEWELL NURSERY Co., Lake City, Minn.

MORE REMUNERATIVE.

My advs. in THE REVIEW were more remunerative than those in any other paper. I am well satisfied.—T. L. MEAD, Oviedo, Fla.

THE BEST IN THE U. S.

You have the best paper in the United States to advertise in. I had to refuse lots of orders.—J. L. ELLIOTT, Bethlehem, Pa.

A GUESSING CONTEST.

A prize of $10.00 will be given by us to the person guessing the number of pins made by the bowler making the highest individual score in any one game during the bowling tournament to be held Saturday, Aug. 10, at 9:00 a. m., German American Hall, Buffalo.

Should more than one person guess correctly the above prize will be divided pro-rata among those so guessing.

This competition will be open to all members of the trade, employees and families, whether attending convention or not. Each person entitled to one guess only. Mail guesses to Edgar Sanders, care of City Convention Hall, Buffalo. Persons attending convention may deposit their guess in box for that purpose in convention hall. Guessing contest closes at 9 a. m., Saturday, Aug. 10.

Awards will be made by the following judges: Edgar Sanders, G. L. Grant, Michael Barker.

BOILER CAPACITY.

Will a 20-horse power boiler properly heat two houses 24x150, three-quarter span, sides 5½ feet? How many 2-inch pipe will it take? T. K.

I assume the houses referred to to be detached structures, with glass on roof, three feet of each vertical side, and one end, in which case the 20-horse power boiler will heat them easily, but would not have capacity to heat an additional one of same dimensions. The economical capacity of a 20-horse power boiler, with low pressure system run under usual greenhouse conditions, is about ten thousand square feet of glass exposure to maintain a night temperature of 55 to 60 degrees Fahrenheit.

BOBBINK & ATKINS, Rutherford, N. J.

THE CANADIAN HORTICULTURAL ASSOCIATION CONVENTION.

All indications point to the coming convention to be held in London, Ont., Monday, Aug. 5 and 6, being the largest that "has been." Railway fares are low and the Pan-American and S. A. F. convention can be taken in by many on the same trip.

Any florist with any pretensions of being "up-to-date," or with any desire to be so, will miss one of the opportunities of his life both of doing good to himself and to others by not attending. The best of us have a great deal to learn. It is only those who know this who know how little they do know. You can learn more practical knowledge by mixing with your fellow men and seeing things outside your own little world in two or three days than you can by reading or otherwise in a year, and this can be truly said without deprecating "reading or otherwise" in the least. Seize every opportunity of keeping "up-to-date." It pays. E.

It is estimated that not less than two thousand of London Old Boys will return to visit the Forest City on August 5, 6 and 7. The local committee guarantee single fare rate on certificate plan. All florists intending to attend the convention at London should avail themselves of this by applying to their ticket agent for a certificate when buying their ticket. "Remember it is the London Old Boys' Reunion," for which this certificate must be had.

DICTIONARY OF GARDENING.

The second, and last, volume of the supplement to Nicholson's Dictionary of Gardening has been issued and a copy has been sent us by the American representative of the publishers, Mr. Geo. T. King, Hyde Park, Mass.

This volume takes in G to Z and is about the same size as the first volume. A large proportion of the engravings are half tones from photographs, as in the first volume, and there are numerous engravings of this type of various moths and butterflies whose larvae is destructive to plants, which will make it possible to readily identify them. This is certainly an excellent feature.

The two volumes include an immense number of additions to the original work and bring this standard authority on plant names right up to date.

WEST GROVE, PA.—Roney Bros. have found it necessary to enlarge their place this year owing to rapidly increasing business.

E. I. RAWLINGS, QUAKERTOWN, PA.

THE BUFFALO CONVENTION!

A Great Meeting and a Splendid Exhibition.

Next Meeting to be Held at Asheville, N. C.

OFFICERS FOR 1902:

President, JOHN BURTON, Philadelphia, Pa.

Vice-President, J. W. C. DEAKE, Asheville, N. C.

Secretary, WM. J. STEWART, Boston, Mass.

Treasurer, H. B. BEATTY, Oil City, Pa.

The Buffalo convention certainly broke all records for attendance and a most enthusiastic gathering of the leading florists of the United States filled the large convention hall to overflowing. It was a splendid gathering, marked for its intelligence and good nature. Vice President Kasting was all abeaming, when, as the local representative, he in a few happy words introduced Mayor Diehl of Buffalo, who said it afforded him the greatest pleasure to meet and offer the freedom of the city of Buffalo to a society whose acts were so beautiful and noble. He said that Buffalo people considered theirs the finest residential city in the world and he hoped that all would thoroughly enjoy their visit.

President O'Mara in response said the members of the society had fond recollections of their visit to Buffalo twelve years ago, and that the country at present felt the power and influence of Niagara and the beauty of Buffalo. As the S. A. F. O. H. was a society organized to develop the beautiful its members could appreciate what they had come to see and do. He called for three cheers for the mayor of Buffalo, to which a tremendous tiger was added.

William Scott in welcoming the society spoke in his usual forceful style and said the city of Buffalo had more asphalted streets than any other city in the world, and that in wind the city was surpassed only by Chicago.

President O'Mara on formally opening the convention paid a high tribute to the Buffalo Florists' Club. He said that New York city florists well knew from recent experience the amount of labor and thought that must be expended in preparing for a convention. He urged a good attendance at all the sessions and said that while the proceedings lived in the written page, it required the spirit of the members to emphasize the work. He then read his address as follows:

President O'Mara's Address.

To the Society of American Florists—Ladies and Gentlemen: Part of the duty imposed upon your president is to report to you in his address to the convention the results of his stewardship since assuming that honorable position. It is, by common consent, his right to recommend to your careful consideration such measures as, in his judgment, deserve your attention, so that you may take such action thereon as your prudence and wisdom may dictate. The opening year of the twentieth century finds horticulture in a flourishing condition in America. It finds, too, the S. A. F. established on a firmer basis than at any time in its history. The experimental stage has apparently been passed. The usefulness of this society to its members, and to horticulture in general, has been so thoroughly demonstrated that there is no longer any hesitation. We move confidently, our membership is more stable, and from every source we learn that it is individually and collectively more ardently imbued with the spirit of progress and harmony, that there is a settled determination to achieve, in their highest sense, the aims and ambitions of the society, to develop and advance American horticulture. The progress made at the New York convention last year has been continued, our life membership has noticeably increased, our financial condition is excellent, the receipts for the past year have exceeded any in the previous history of the society, and it is fitting that your president should congratulate you on the substantial progress made. In doing this, let me urge you to continue the good work energetically, let each member perform cheerfully and conscientiously the duties assigned to him, be they great or small. This being done, there is no limit to the sphere of usefulness of our beloved society.

Horticultural Progress.

It is proper, too, that your president should note the general prosperity of the craft during the past year. The prosperity of horticulture has been coincident with the general good business conditions of the country. Never before, perhaps, in a single year was such progress made in building country homes near our large cities, in developing large estates, thus creating a demand for the products of horticulture unprecedented in the annals of the country. It is the earnest hope and wish of your president that this condition will continue, that our glorious country will keep on its God-appointed course, triumphing in the arts of peace, a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night in the vanguard of the world's upward progress. It is, too, his earnest hope and wish that this society will keep step with every advance made, and that it will achieve its ambition to become the leading horticultural society in the world.

The National Charter.

At the last year's convention a motion was made and carried that the incoming president appoint a committee of five to continue and carry out the project of obtaining a national charter for this society. One of the first duties of your president was to appoint said committee, which was made larger upon the advice of the chairman appointed, viz. Mr. Wm. R. Smith. The efforts of that committee were successful, and, without detracting from the work of any member, it can be said that to the chairman, ably assisted by Mr. Durfee, we are to-day in the highly honorable and unique position of enjoying a charter granted by the Congress and signed by the President of the United States. The task undertaken eight years ago, and brought once to the threshold of successful completion, has at last been finished. All honor to the man through whose untiring and unselfish efforts we are enabled to-day in this first year of the new century, within the shadow of the great Exposition of Pan-American progress, to meet in name and in fame a bona fide national American Society of Horticulture.

Work of the Incorporators.

The incorporators met in Washington on May 14th last, to organize legally under the new charter and to formulate a constitution and by-laws to meet the exigencies presented by the new conditions. The question of closer co-operation between the S. A. F. and special societies, which are in a large sense the natural expansion of what has been aptly termed the parent society, received careful consideration, and the constitution which will be presented to you in due time was unanimously adopted. Our able and industrious secretary prepared and submitted a draft of these in advance to the incorporators. A committee of five appointed at the meeting of the Executive Committee in March also had the matter under consideration and passed favorably upon them, so that the constitution and by-laws to be presented may be fairly stated as embodying the views and judgment of a very representative body of this society. We were also assisted by the advice and counsel of members of the various special societies most interested; thus the matter will come before you endorsed favorably by those who have at the present time the responsibility of office upon them.

The Value of Co-operation.

The value to all of closer co-operation is generally conceded; the only differences of opinion are in the means to be adopted. Time may demonstrate that there is no more apparent need for a special flower society, having a separate and isolated existence, than there is for a special fruit, tree or vegetable society. I make bold to say that if the S. A. F. were not in existence, and the special flower societies were in being as they are to-day, the paramount question before them would be how to effect an alliance for mutual benefit. That the means are at hand through the S. A. F. whereby this natural and desirable condition can be reached, should be deemed fortunate. It is not by the pulling down of any, but by the uplifting of all, that we can hope to place our beloved profession on its rightful plane, and maintain it in its proper orbit of usefulness to each other and the country at large. It is not too much to say that the shaping of the destiny of horticulture in this hemisphere is largely in our hands, that broad-minded, far-reaching policies will accomplish much in this day and generation that otherwise might seem impossible. This is an era of wide horizons. Reactionary movements are out of place with the spirit of American progress. Let us join in the grand procession and be not laggards in the general forward movement!

Work of the Executive Committees.

The appointees made on the Executive Committee in January, were Messrs. Alex. Wallace, of New York City; Emil Buettner, of Park Ridge, Ill., and Richard Witterstaetter, of Sedamsville, Ohio, in place of Messrs. John H. Taylor, W. W. Coles and E. H. Cushman. The gentlemen retiring performed their duties faithfully, and I would recommend that a precedent be set by tendering them a vote of thanks in this convention. It is an act of courtesy which should, in my opinion, be performed each year as the members reported that, for lack of capital, the committee was unable to take advantage of market fluctuations. After some consideration it was voted that the committee be thanked for its services and discharged. Mr. Wm. R. Smith was added to the Committee on Permanent Home, and the committee continued. Now that we have a national charter, and the stipulation is made therein that the principal office of the society shall be in Washington, we hope that a permanent home can be provided there. The benefits accruing to the society from such an acquisition are but too obvious, and do not require elaboration here. Let us hope that we may be able to realize our fondest hopes in regard to it. The work is in the hands of an able committee and the last addition is a tower of strength. The Executive Committee accepted the proposition of the Buffalo Florists' Club regarding the holding of the trade exhibition, and appointed Mr. Chas. H. Keitseh as manager. The committee on award of medals through floricultural organizations recommended that one silver and one bronze medal be offered to each of the following organizations, to be awarded for new and meritorious plants or flowers of American origin exhibited at a regular public exhibition, said medals not to be awarded unless the plants and flowers exhibited are entirely worthy of such award, viz.: New York Florists' Club, American Carnation Society, American Rose Society, American Dahlia Society, New Jersey Floricultural Society, Pennsylvania Horticultural Society, Massachusetts Horticultural Society, Society telegram was received from Mr. Wm. R. Smith, announcing the signing of the national charter by President McKinley. In recognition of Mr. Smith's valuable services to the society, a committee was then and there appointed to draft suitable resolutions of thanks, have them properly engrossed and framed and presented to him, which was done.

Development of Horticultural Industries.

It seems opportune here to refer to the principle upon which and through which the charter was granted, viz., the development and advancement of American horticulture. Along certain lines this society can do more in that direction than any or probably all the kindred societies in the country. There are limitless acres and plenty of willing hands ready to produce here almost everything which we now import in plants, bulbs and seeds if the proper impetus is given. Much has been done in that direction already, but much yet remains to be done, and the subject deserves your most careful consideration. In various parts of the country the bulb industry has been started, but it is yet in its infancy. Only recently a company has been incorporated for the production of bulbs which are now imported. Ex-President Wm. R. Smith forcibly alluded to this in his address at St. Louis, in 1893, and cited the fact that nearly two million dollars had been sent the previous year to foreign countries for plants, bulbs and seeds. A great portion of that sum can undoubtedly be retained here if proper steps are taken to develop the natural resources of our country. I would suggest that the proper authorities be approached by a committee from this society, with a view to sending some one abroad—to Europe, and possibly Japan and China, to study the production of what we import, obtain all essential details, and have the results of his inquiries published in regular form. I would further suggest that this society obtain samples of bulbs now being produced here, and distribute them among growers for trial; that the silver medals of the society be awarded to the producers of bulbs whose stocks give the best results and that the whole matter be reported in full to the society in convention assembled by the secretary of the S. A. F. Some practical step should be taken to develop this industry, and it should extend to plants and seeds as well. If these suggestions do not appear to fit the situation, I trust that from this convention will flow some that will.

retire. The committee met in Buffalo, on March 5th last, and remained in session two days. During that time the Buffalo Florists' Club was unremittent in their attentions to the committee. The usual work of preparing a program was completed and the result is shown in the program of this convention. A legislative committee, consisting of Messrs. John N. May, Robert Craig, Benjamin Durfee, Wm. R. Smith and your president, was appointed, with special reference to securing favorable action on the domestic parcels post measure before Congress. This is certain to come up again, and it should be to the interests of this society to have such a bill become a law. Mr. Edmund M. Wood, on behalf of the Purchasing Committee, of Indiana Florists, Chicago Horticultural Society, Newport Horticultural Society.

The official report of the details of said awards, with the name and description of the plant or flower to which said medals have been awarded, shall be furnished to the secretary of the S. A. F. for the purposes of record. This seems a move in the right direction. The S. A. F. should be and is above all else educational, and this award of medals should encourage exhibitions of new and meritorious plants of American origin; it should increase the prestige and broaden the influence of our society. The medals should become the recognized standard for excellence.

While the committee was in session a

The Educational Problem.

This work is educational in its best and most practical sense. Before quitting the subject allow me to make a plea for the young employe. Every florist's establishment should be educational for the employe in the greatest possible degree. The successful florist must have the keenest knowledge of nature's laws. He is a chemist, if you will, handling the subtle forces of soil, water and air to be transmitted through his agency into glorious flowers and redundant foliage, or through his neglect into distorted, sickly and abnormal growths. The employe has much to do with either result; hence his discriminating faculties must be sharpened by awakening his reasoning powers. Be patient with him, reason with him, encourage independent judgment, develop his reasoning faculties, place opportunities for studying the theories of the proprofession at his disposal. Employees are not all born to be "heavers of wood and drawers of water" perpetually, and one lifted out of the ruck will recompense for many disappointments. A little altruism is a saving grace and we should cultivate it more. This policy is not entirely unselfish either, for there are few indeed who seek to educate others and fail in doing so to develop their own faculties. The facilities for developing a better grade of employes are immeasurably better than they were when this society was organized. Valuable books by members, practical books, have been written. The trade press is teeming with invaluable information; local clubs where discussions take place, where exhibitions are more numerous, are in all our principal cities. A competition for general excellence, or proficiency in specialties, with a book, a subscription to the trade papers, a year's membership in the S. A. F., or a local club, as a prize, should stimulate the ambitious and develop the industry of the best, while exposing the want of these in others. The reports of the experiment stations are within the reach of all, and now that they are devoting more attention to horticultural work, their reports should be obtained and placed in the hands of those who are hungering for them. This will broaden the influence of the stations and help them to achieve their mission.

College Versus Practical Training.

So much has been said in previous conventions of the need for an experimental garden, college or school wherein to train young men, that I make bold to press the foregoing on your attention. It is a vital subject, fraught with the gravest importance to us as individuals as well as in our collective capacity. An institution such as has been urged upon this society frequently by ex-presidents in their annual addresses, and advocated by members, is, I fear, beyond the power of this society to create or maintain. I have reasonable doubts of its utility if created. Let us use the means at hand to their greatest extent and we are likely to be astonished at the good results, if persevered in for any considerable time. I quote as appropos to the subject, from the address of Prof. F. W. Card, before the Section of Botany and Horticulture at the New Haven meeting of the Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations, as follows:

"Horticultural education began when man first learned to grow garden products and told his neighbor how. The educational method thus introduced has been in vogue since, and has produced more good horticulturists than any other. It is still the school which trains the rank and file of the gardeners employed on private estates, and the majority of practical horticulturists in all lines. We who are engaged in schools of another type are wont to place a low estimate on this kind of education; yet if we are looking for a particularly skillful man in any line this is the place to find him. Rule of thumb methods may largely prevail, but deny it as we may, just this kind of training must ever form an important part of the education needed by professional horticulturists. The recognition of this general truth has led to the introduction and retention of manual training in many of our institutions. The mistake of this, if mistakes there be, is not in overestimating the importance of manual training, but in assuming that the college is the best place to get it. Unquestionably the college is the best place to get some kinds of manual training, but it may not be the best place to acquire the details of handicraft in agriculture and horticulture. In so far as it is the best place, we are right in emphasizing it; in so far as it is not, let us leave practice to the school best fitted to teach it, and principles to the one best fitted to teach them."

What better testimony do we require of the great value of the training you can give? Further on he said:

"Closely affiliated with this phase of education are horticultural societies. When man has done something creditable, he not only likes to show the product of his skill, but to tell his neighbor about it. If his neighbor has done something creditable, man wants to ask him how it was done. The horticultural societies afford an opportunity to relate experiences and to ask questions. It gives the specialist a chance to tell his methods and others a chance to learn them. It brings together men who are interested in the same things, a prime factor in making education effective. Horticultural societies have had a vast influence in developing the horticulture and the horticulturists of our country. Their work does not stop with the mere interchange of experiences, for they are the chief factors behind most exhibitions, and the information brought to the surface at their meetings is scattered far and wide in printed reports. The education of the societies is fragmentary and unsystematic, but it is intensely practical. It gets at the information wanted if it is to be had. This much college education does not do."

Let us, then, work along our own line; "stick to our last" as it were, supplementing our practical experience with all that we can glean which is useful to us from the college reports and experiments. Let us not be chary of imparting the results of our experience to others.

Achievements of the S. A. F.

This society has accomplished much of practical benefit since it was organized. These benefits were not confined to its members, but were shared by all the craft. It is an oft-told story, and so I will only briefly allude to its salient points. The reduction of the postage rate on plants and seeds obtained while the society was in its infancy. This achievement alone is enough to earn the gratitude of every one interested in horticulture. The work of the Nomenclature Committee in correcting errors. The obtaining of a lower express rate on plants and bulbs, with its saving to the grower and planter. The work of the Legislative Committee in safeguarding the interests of the florists during the panic of insect legislation. The essays and discussions which were published. The adoption of standard flower pots. These benefits alone should induce every florist to become and remain a member of the S. A. F., and should set at rest forever the pessimistic inquiries we occasionally hear as to what we have accomplished. The Florists' Hall Association came into existence through and by the S. A. F. At the New York Convention in 1888, it had insured 811,951 square feet of glass. At that convention the total area of glass reported in the United States was 13,651,590 square feet. At the present time the association insures in round numbers, say 1,500,000 square feet, aggregating risks of nearly a million dollars. Since its organization over 500 losses have been paid, amounting to over $45,000, and it holds a reserve fund of nearly $9,000. This is part of the record of the S. A. F. A trade press has been established, which provides a medium whereby the florist can buy and sell at greater advantage than would be otherwise possible, not to speak of the invaluable information it gleans and disseminates. From out of the S. A. F., and encouraged by it, have sprung special flower societies with all their attendant benefits. The annual meetings of the S. A. F. furnish an opportunity to the members of comparing notes to their mutual advantage. The exhibitions display the latest and most improved appliances. The opportunity is given to buy and sell to meet old friends and make new ones. It is the forum from which issues the voice of our American floriculture in its best and broadest sense. It is a society to be proud of for its achievements, to be sanguine of for its opportunities. We meet clothed with the new dignity of a national charter; we assume new responsibilities; our "manifest destiny" is plainer before us than ever. Let us rise to the occasion, let us renew our fealty to the old-new society. Let us show that we are worthy of the honor conferred upon us. The vista of the new century opens before us, we enter it auspiciously; with our feet firmly planted on the solid foundation which has been laid, and our eyes fixed on the rising sun of promise; in serried ranks, shoulder to shoulder, let us march forth to new fields and more glorious achievements.

Secretary Stewart then read the following letter from Mr. W. R. Smith, who regretted his inability to be present:

Acknowledgment from Ex-President S. A. F., Wm. K. Smith.

To Mr. Patrick O'Mara, President S. A. F., and Mr. Wm. J. Stewart, Secretary S. A. F. Gentslemen: As the representative of the executive committee of the Society of American Florists, permit me to thank you, and thank you, then and the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists, for the testimonial left in my library in my absence. Words fail to express my appreciation of its beauty and elegance. It is difficult to say whether it excels in phraseology or in artistic execution; both are excellent and give me unfeigned delight.

I regretted to leave so suddenly, without you and the incorporators that courtesy which my heart felt, for your careful deliberation on the great subject which has engrossed my attention for the last ten years. I am truly sorry that circumstances will prevent me from appearing in person, at the meeting in Buffalo, to thank you each and all individually.

The genial, kindly way the incorporators met and the earnest manner in which the discussions proceeded, augur well, in my opinion, for the great success of ornamental horticulture in the future. All seemed to realize the importance of union. The form of the union is a secondary matter compared with the thing itself, the reality.

In the afternoon of life it is pleasant to be thought well of by those with whom you have intimately associated for years in an effort to promote horticulture. Hence, my appreciation of the great compliment paid me by the testimonial can be better felt than expressed. Let me hope that the society may live long and prosper, and that my name may never be mentioned in connection with it.

"May never wicked men bamboozle it," but may it go on and on in the great work of elevating the national taste, till time itself shall be no more.

Thanking you for your kind testimonial, I am, very sincerely yours, W. M. R. SMITH, National Botanic Garden, Washington, D. C., July 22, 1901.

The Horticultural Society of New York sent an invitation to attend a conference on plant hybridization, to be held in New York in September. The matter was referred to the executive committee.

Congratulatory telegrams were read from the Pacific Coast Horticultural Society, San Francisco, and ex-President E. M. Wood, who regretted that through illness it was impossible for him to be present.

Mr. C. W. Ward, on behalf of the special committee on fertilizers said that owing to illness it was impossible for him to render a complete report. He was of the opinion that the time would soon be here when plant growers would use exclusively artificial fertilizers. What experiments he had made with them had been entirely satisfactory. He advised all interested to study Vorhan's work on fertilizers.

In his annual report Secretary Stewart said:

"A year of uninterrupted prosperity, marked by a largely augmented membership, a spirited convention, with a trade exhibition of unprecedented magnitude and a horticultural display of unusual excellence—a year of harmony and progress, that is, in brief, the record of our society for 1900.

"The crowning event of the year and of our history as a society is the acquisition of our national charter. This act of incorporation will have the effect of broadening our horizon and opens up before us a wide field for study and investigation, development of an American standard for American horticultural societies.

"With our widened sphere and extending influence our opportunity for useful activity is hindered only by lack of funds, which, with the now assured permanency of our organization, should be secured in some way."

Treasurer Beatty reported receipts for the year 1900 as $3,000.45, which with balance on hand made a total of $3,851, total disbursements for the year, $2,094.08, leaving cash on hand December 31, 1900, $1,756.02. For the period from December 31, 1900, to July 31, 1901, the total receipts were $1,217.02; disbursements, $950.39, and the total cash on hand July 31, 1901, was $2,023.25.

The life membership fund has received $425.17 since January 1 last, and now amounts to $1,379.62. It gave him pleasure to announce that it had been the banner financial year of the society.

On reading of the report showing that the life membership fund amounted to $954.45 on December 31, 1900, Mr. C. W. Ward donated $45 to the fund, so it might be an even $1,000. The announcement was received with much applause, and on motion a vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Ward.

The reports of the state vice presidents were ordered printed without being read.

The judges for the trade exhibition were announced as follows:

Class A, Plants—E. O. Orpet, Peter Murray, John Dingwall.

Class B, Cut Blooms—P. J. Hauswirth, Louis Duppy, Robert Flowerday.

Class C, Boilers and Heating Apparatus—William Bester, W. Wedge, F. R. Mathison.

The Carriage Ride.

At 2 p. m. on Tuesday about thirty vehicles of many styles, from the trolley and four horses to the ordinary coach, arrived at the convention hall and were soon loaded with the beauty and virtue of the convention. About four hundred ladies enjoyed the drive. The local management would very well liked to have had more of the husbands along, but the lack of conveyances forbade.

To explain the points of interest a small batch of veterans went along. They included: Mr. James Dean, M. H. Norton, J. D. Carmody, E. G. Hill, Bart Cartledge, J. A. Shaw, Edwin Lonsdale, Edgar Sanders, J. W. C. Deake, and others. The route was up Delaware avenue to North street, to the Front, overlooking the Niagara river and the Canadian frontier, then around the park meadow by The Zoo, returning through beautiful Forest Lawn Cemetery to Delaware avenue, and down its full length to the starting point. A stop was made at the park to stretch our limbs and moisten our throats. The smooth pavement and shady avenues of Buffalo's residence district were admired and enjoyed by all.

The Chrysanthemum Society.

The annual meeting of the Chrysanthemum Society of America was held in Convention Hall at 3 p. m. Tuesday. President Arthur Herrington presided and among those present were: E. G. Hill, E. Lonsdale, J. W. Withers, H. Papworth, W. N. Rudd, E. Smith.

The attendance was not what it might or should have been; it appeared more or less like the old faithful guard protecting its pet. It is very difficult to understand why more interest is not taken in a society that has done so much to develop the chrysanthemum and protect the interest of growers. Secretary Lonsdale read the annual report, which stated that 27 new varieties had been placed before the society's committees and 17 of these were awarded certificates. The treasurer's report, while showing a good balance, also revealed the fact that the reduction of annual dues was of little or no benefit.

The secretary presented voluminous correspondence, which was amply discussed. Every possible means of extending the society was thoroughly considered. Mr. Withers thought that the issuing by the society of an annual record would be of considerable value. Mr. Papworth urged more attention and special awards for amateurs. Mr. Hill said there was a lack of energy somewhere. Mr. Rudd proposed and Mr. Lonsdale seconded the following resolution, which was passed:

That a committee of three be appointed to confer with the officers and executive committee of the S. A. F. O. H. with a view of consolidation; that the C. S. A. might become a section of the chartered society and that the committee report at the next meeting. Mr. Rudd was of opinion that affiliation would be the society's salvation. Messrs. Herrington, Lonsdale and Rudd were appointed the committee on conference. It was decided that the society's cup be offered at the New York Florists' Club's show next fall for the best ten blooms of any one variety of chrysanthemum. All the officers were re-elected to guide the society for the ensuing year.

Bowling.

On Wednesday afternoon a preliminary mitch game was played between two three-men teams from Chicago and St. Louis, the former city being represented by Messrs. Adams, Winterson and Foerster and the latter by Messrs. Benke, Ellison and Kuehn.

The St. Louisans won out with 150 pins to spare and each is now wearing a $4 hat purchased with Chicago money.

At the annual meeting of the National Florists' Bowling League the officers were all re-elected as follows: William Scott, president; P. J. Hauswirth, secretary; J. F. Wilcox, treasurer.

American Carnation Society.

The meeting of the above society was held on Wednesday afternoon, with President E. G. Hill presiding. The executive committee was empowered to purchase suitable vases for the society's annual shows.

In order to comply with conditions at Indianapolis the date of annual meeting and exhibition was changed to the 19th and 20th of February.

It was decided to offer the $30 given to the society by J. W. Garrett of Baltimore for the best 50 blooms of a seedling carnation not yet in commerce. First prize to be $30; second prize, $20. The gold, silver and bronze medals were taken to turn over to the chartered society all the property and rights belonging to the old organization.

The new constitution and by-laws were then presented and considered section by section. A few minor changes were made in other articles, but article five on Co-operative Societies, was rejected and a committee was appointed to draft a new article. The discussion developed the fact that there are many legal minds in the membership.

Asheville, N. C., Next Year.

Invitations for next year were received from the cities of Milwaukee, Wis., and Asheville, N. C., and a great deal of lucid oratory was exhausted by a representative of the Asheville Board of Trade. That it was effective was evidenced by the vote which to the amazement of all showed a majority of four in favor of Asheville.

ANNUAL REPORT OF SECRETARY STEWART.

A year of uninterrupted prosperity, marked by a largely augmented membership; a spirited convention, with a trade exhibition of unprecedented magnitude and a horticultural display of unusual excellence; a year of harmony and progress—this is, in brief, the record of our society for 1900. We are to remember pleasantly of that great assembly last August, with its brilliant illustration of many of our best records, and the opportunities afforded for inspecting the most advanced examples of American horticultural industry. It was a record of the year, despite the ailments of the great city, the attendance at the meetings was unexpectedly full, the interest was unabated from start to finish, and the vital objects of our coming together were never lost sight of in the bewilderment of good things so lavishly provided for us by our brethren of the metropolis of America.

The annual report of proceedings, with full details of everything in connection with the event and much other matter of practical value, was issued, as usual, in the fall, and a copy transmitted to each member of the society, also to various libraries, societies, clubs and experiment stations making request therefor. It contains much that will be helpful to the cultivator and is valuable as an authentic record of the condition of American horticulture in the closing of the nineteenth century.

The list of plants recorded as introduced to commerce in this country during the year included four roses, five carnations, seven geraniums, 7 sweet peas, 27 carnations, 4 geraniums, 47 chrysanthemums and 150 miscellaneous plants. In compiling this annual list every information in his power, but would respectfully ask all members to notify him promptly when about to disseminate for the first time any plant of native or foreign origin.

The number of members of 1900 who failed to renew their membership for 1901 was sixty-three, including six resignations. The number of new members added during the year 1900 was 270, of whom four were life members. The additions were credited to the various states as follows: Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Mexico, Virginia, West Virginia, Vermont, Washington, Canada, one each; Georgia, Iowa, Wisconsin, Maine, two each; Missouri, New Hampshire, Indiana, three each; Michigan, five; District of Columbia, seven; Ohio, eleven; Maryland, thirteen; Connecticut, fourteen; Illinois, fifteen; Rhode Island, seventeen; New Jersey, nineteen; Massachusetts, thirty-two; Pennsylvania, thirty-nine; New York, seventy-one.

It is gratifying to report that many of the state vice-presidents have shown commendable zeal during the present year in endeavoring to increase the membership from their respective districts. The number of members whose names appear on the roll book as in good standing on December 31, 1900, is 734, of whom thirty-three are life members. The number of life members has now increased to fifty.

There have been but four removals by death since the last meeting: McKee, died November 28, 1900; W. J. Palmer, died December 19, 1900; John Galvin, died February 24, 1901; A. O. Rothrock, died April 4, 1901.

The official list of new plants registered by the society has been increased by the addition of the following:

- August 17, 1900, Nephrolepis, Washingtonensis erecta and N. Washingtonensis pendula, by N. Studer.
- September 22, 1900, Cannas, Montana and West Grove, by Conard & Jones Co.
- October 22, 1900, Geranium, Florida E. Rexford and Dr. E. A. Hering, by Henry Eichholz.
- October 6, 1900, Rose, Flush of Dawn, by M. H. Walsh.
- October 6, 1900, Dahlias, Salmon Queen and Harlequin, by W. Adie Ewing.
- October 6, Cannas, West Virginia, by Gustav Obermeyer.

October 28, 1900, Cannas, Pennsylvania and Betsy Ross, by Conard & Jones.

October 27, 1900, Rose, Pan-American, by Peter Henderson & Co.

November 3, 1900, Cannas, Little Gem, by Peter Henderson & Co.

November 12, 1900, Rose, Freedom, by Arthur Griffin.

November 24, 1900, Nephrolepis, Piersoni, by F. E. Pierson Co.

December 15, 1900, Carnations, Norway and Egypt, by H. Weber & Sons.

December 15, Sweet Pea, Miss Florence E. Denzer, by A. C. Zvolanek.

January 12, 1901, Carnation, Beau Ideal, by Nathan D. Pierce.

February 9, 1901, Sweet Pea, Miss Helen M. Gould, by A. C. Zvolanek.

February 28, 1901, Rose, Four Hundred, by D. D. Ziegler.

June 8, 1901, Rose, Gainsborough, by Good & Reese Co.

July 1, 1901, Cattleya, Newport Hambley, by Richard Gardner.

July 27, 1901, Cattleya, Mossiae var. Evelyn Sloane, by A. J. Lovell.

July 30, 1901, Rose, Dorothy Perkins, by Jackson & Perkins Co.

August 1, 1901, Geranium, Mrs. G. Jackson, by Gustav Obermeyer.

It is hoped that a plan may be adopted at will be offered in three prizes for the best 100 blooms at the show.

It was decided to keep the public out of the exhibition hall until 6 p. m. on the first day in order to give florists a better chance to examine the flowers.

It was recommended that the exhibition tables be no higher than 2 feet 4 inches.

The following gentlemen will be asked to prepare papers on the subjects here mentioned: Mr. Giergerich, of the Michigan Experimental Station, on "Electricity Applied to Carnations"; Mr. Pierson, of Cromwell, Conn., on "Sterilization of Soil"; Mr. C. W. Ward, on "Sub-irrigation and Artificial Fertilizer"; E. G. Gillett, on "Growers' Methods from a Commission Man's Standpoint."

It was unanimously considered that the meeting at Indianapolis would be the best in the history of the society.

Hail Association.

The Hail Association accepted the reports that appear elsewhere in this issue and re-elected all the old officers.

The Charter.

At the Wednesday morning session the charter was read and on motion of Mr. Beatty same was accepted by a unanimous vote. Then the necessary steps tary" votes for Asheville were probably more sadly jarred than the others and the feeling of dismay was general; every one seemed to feel that, though Asheville would undoubtedly be a pleasant place to hold the convention, and that the welcome of the one florist of that city would be hearty, the convention would be a failure in attendance, business and financial results if held in the southern city. After the morning session adjourned there was much talk of having a reconsideration of the ballot at the next session but the meeting was not well attended and there was an unwillingness to take the initiative.

In the evening Prof. Taylor delivered his lecture on "Expositions as Educators," freely illustrated with stereopticon views.

Officers for 1902.

The only contest in the election of officers was for the presidency, the two nominees being John Burton, of Philadelphia, and W. F. Kasting, of Buffalo. But before a ballot was taken Mr. Kasting withdrew and on his motion Mr. Burton was elected by unanimous vote. J. W. C. Deake, Asheville, N. C., was elected vice-president. Secretary Stewart and Treasurer Beatty were selected by unanimous votes.

this meeting whereby all new plants of whatever species, may be registered under one bureau. The desirability of a uniform system in this important department must be evident to everybody.

The usual executive meeting was held in this city on March 5-7, all the members of the Board being present except two. The welcome news of the final passage and signing of the bill giving us a national charter was received with enthusiasm and to our friends whose long and arduous efforts had termi-facilities for gathering the right material. It would seem that the time is now here when the issuing of a quarterly bulletin from the secretary's office might be carried out with great benefit to our members. But with our present income, this is out of the question.

The kind assistance and many courtesies extended at all times by the officers and members of the Society are deeply appreciated by your secretary, and contribute not a little to making the performance of the duties of his office an unalloyed pleasure.

our ranks during the past year; there are now on roll about 150. The treasurer's report recently showed that the club was in good financial condition.

The Society went out invitations to society ladies to become associate members, the object being to raise a fund for exhibition purposes. There has been a good response to same—about eighty-five—thereby insuring the possibility of a very successful exhibition, chrysanthemum and carnations, for which a prophesy success.

The meeting of the National Carnation Society, which was held under the auspices of the Gardeners' Club, as most of you gentlemen are aware, was, we believe, a success and the good it has done to the florists of this city and state is, possibly, beyond comprehension.

As to our part as hosts, modesty compels us to say nothing. We only hope that such of you as did visit us on the occasion may return again some day on a similar mission, and that we may have the pleasure of welcoming you to "Maryland, my Maryland."

Respectfully submitted,

RICHARD VINCENT, JR.

New York, East.

To the President and Members of the S. A. F. O. H.

It is a difficult task for a vice-president to be brief and yet make an accurate report for eastern New York. There are so many small cities in the territory, and each one has a different way of doing business, according to its trade, on account of being so busy that just across some small river trade might be at a standstill.

It is with pleasure, however, that I report that business on the average was very good; there is a feeling in all lines that we have passed a prosperous year. The outlook seems bright, and we anticipate a good season.

The Christmas trade was chiefly composed of plants, among good-selling kinds being Begonia Gloire de Lorraine and the Christmas Poppet.

Trade at Thanksgiving, Washington's Birthday and Decoration Day has been very satisfactory. In some respects, exceeding that of what are generally considered the leading holidays.

Easter trade throughout the state was good; in most cases 25 per cent better than last year. In Manhattan Borough some did well, sold all their stock at fair cut flower business; while in Brooklyn the majority of the retailers had most of their plants left, and it is hardly possible to say that the very unpropitious weather, last Easter would have been the best on record in Greater New York. In the plantmen's ranks, the cut flower prices were soaring high, then the drizzle came, followed by the flop, and what was to be gotten out of it was a very small one. Violets and tulips suffered most, more of these being left on hand than came in on certain days.

It is now a decided fact that the principal trade at the holidays is composed of plants. I remember past Eastern winter when the drug, but that time is past, and I do not believe that we will ever exceed the demand. I have never recently seen a plant that was on the market last winter, and they were sold at $1 to $3 per hundred.

During the present greenhouse construction has been 25 per cent better than during the same period last year; this has been mostly private work, with a decrease in commercial ranges. There is no likelihood of a diminution in the price of building material, except when all the glass factories start up again in the fall there may be a possible reduction in glass, but that is far distant, as the price of building material is now high.

Among the plantmen all bedding and summer flowering plants were in brisk demand, especially the chrysanthemum and geranium. The cut flower business has varied. The fall was poor, but since the 1st of January, and up to the present, it has been very satisfactory. One has heard of some growers who have been no great drugs for any length of time. The rose drug was passed over very nicely. One has heard of some growers who were always salable—other years at times they could not be moved at $1 per thousand. The carnations, too, during their glut, were sold at fair figures.

The chrysanthemum, in my opinion, for the present has been a hard one to realize any fair price for them, and there are too many flowers on the market at the time they appear, and a great number of the New York market flowers that are ideal and realize just as good prices as they ever did. The dahlia crop was a heavy one, and an average the prices were about the same as in former years. Great quantities were disposed of this year, but the public is not so large. There must be long stemmed, large flowered and sweet scented varieties, and growers should always hold their own. I do not know of many new establishments going up this season, owing to the high cost of growing them.

Among the rose growers stock looks well; there are no heavy plantings in new varieties except in Maryland.

The carnation cutting business this season was larger than that of any previous year. Most of the early cuttings were sold in the field, the early plantings look all right, but the later ones are much smaller than ated so successfully, and a committee was appointed to prepare and send an appropriate acknowledgment to our honored ex-president, to whom, above all others, the credit is due. This committee attended to its duties, and the following testimonial, beautifully engrossed and framed, was in due time safely delivered at Washington:

To Wm. R. Smith.

Greeting: The Executive Committee of the S. A. F., assembled at Buffalo, N. Y., March 5, 1901, on being apprised of the fact that a National Charter for said Society had been duly granted by Congress and signed by the President of the United States, did then and there unanimously adopt the following resolution: Be it resolved, "That in the name of the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists which we here represent, we hereby express to our beloved ex-president and esteemed fellow member, Mr. William R. Smith, superintendent of the Botanic Garden, Washington, D. C., our grateful appreciation of his devoted and unselfish efforts on behalf of this Society, and tender our heartfelt congratulations upon the successful termination of his persevering endeavors to secure for us a National Charter. The realization, through his instrumentality, of this unique privilege, pregnant with the possibilities for great advancement of horticulture in America, places him among the benefactors of our profession, whose names are imperishable in horticultural annals.

(Signed) Patrick O'Mara, president; Wm. J. Stewart, secretary.

In illuminated panels at each of the upper corners appeared these quotations: "Loved at home, revered abroad." "Health and peace and sweet content for an appreciative world has been received from ex-President Smith, who, being now in Europe, is unable to be present."

The letter will be read in the regular order. Of the medals provided by the Executive Committee for award through the medium of sister societies, there has been awarded up to date, our silver medal by the Newport Horticultural Society for the new dwarf cannas Bobs. The crowning event of the year and of our history as a society is the acquisition of our National Charter. This act of incorporation will have the effect of broadening our horizon and opens up before us a wide field for study and investigation in the development of an American standard in meritorious horticulture and the encouragement of American horticultural industries. Horticulture is the best relaxation we can offer to himself, weary with the labors of the factory or burdened with the cares and perplexities of the counting room or the corporation office. With our widened sphere and extending influence, our opportunity for useful activity is hindered only by lack of funds which, with the now assured permanency of our organization, should be secured in some way. REPORTS OF STATE VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Maryland.

To the President and Members of the S. A. F. O. H. in Convention Assembled.

Greeting:

Trade, generally for the past year has been good. Fair prices have been realized and more than the usual amount of material disposed of, especially at Easter, both the quantity and quality of flowers and plants being superior, showing that our gardeners and florists are fully awake to the needs and necessities of the times, and that if they want to get the money out of their products it is quality that will do it and not quantity.

Very little building is going on with the exception to the increased cost of material, especially glass. Some few have built, and several new establishments have started. Should cost of material decline and trade continue good, no doubt a large amount of building would be done, but at present prices it is practically impossible for a man of moderate means to build an establishment of any size for commercial purposes.

Being a member of the Gardeners' Club, and nine-tenths of the florists of the state being members of that club, my report necessarily covers the doings of said club. November 8, a dahlia show was held in the club room, free to the public, at which were exhibited a grand collection, the largest and finest being from R. Vincent, Jr., & Son. H. A. Dreer exhibited some nice water lilies; John Cook, fine Mrs. Garrett, and Baltimore roses; F. Bauer and H. Fisher, Maman Collet roses and dahlias. Halliday Bros. decorated the hall with beautiful palms, altogether making an attractive exhibit.

October 22, Mr. A. Herr, secretary American Carnation Society, was present and gave us an address. The club provided a smoker and entertainment in honor of our guest.

November 12, a chrysanthemum show was held in the club room, free to the public, at which were exhibited the finest chrysanthemums ever shown in Baltimore. There were also fine displays of roses, carnations, violets, orchids and palms. At least 4,000 persons visited the hall.

November 26, Prof. W. G. Johnson, state entomologist, was present and extended an invitation from the Executive Board to the club to affiliate with the Maryland State Horticultural Society. The club accepted the invitation, thereby becoming members, as a body, of that organization.

December 14, Prof. Townsend, of the State Horticultural Society, gave a stereoscopic lecture on plant life.

January 13, Mr. R. Vincent, Jr., gave a talk on his recent visit to brother florists of the North.

February 13, Mr. C. L. Seybold, superintendent of Patterson Park, read an essay on pruning. Quite a number of new members have joined those of last year. This is owing to the extreme hot weather. The output from Long Island of carnation flowers ranges about 5,000,000 annually.

The auction salesrooms have been very largely patronized this year, and more stock has been disposed of than formerly and at better prices; the sales, too, have extended later in the year than usual, owing to the large quantities of the more costly flowering shrubs, geraniums, coleus, also box and bays sold well. The sales of conifers were also very satisfactory. The National Executive Committee of the Chrysanthemum Society of America met at its usual stated periods and awarded prizes to the following exhibitors: Mrs. W. B. Chamberlain, Brutus, Malcolm Lamond and Golden Fame.

The American Rose Society held its second annual show in March at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. The exhibition was a grand success, the roses and carnations being among the best products of American culture. The men who devoted their time and labor to the exhibition deserve a great deal of credit. One thing I do not approve is the charge of $5 admission. Make the prices popular, so as to reach the masses. Our neighboring cities and towns have held their usual flower shows, returns in which have been very satisfactory.

The Horticultural Society of New York, in conjunction with the New York Botanical Garden, held a very successful exhibition in Brooklyn. At this show a prize of $50 for "the best horticultural novelty" was awarded to H. Harrington, for an exhibit of Gerbera Jamesonii.

Among the new books issued during the past year to the public, and which may be mentioned the third volume of Bailey's Encyclopedia of Horticulture; Cabbage, Cauliflower and Vegetables, by H. A. Langjahr.

Obituary.—It is a matter for gratification that the hand of death has been laid less heavy on the shoulders of florists. In this section than in some former years; still, it is my painful duty to record the passing away of John A. Myer, a florist, and a man of a skilled and learned chemist, who by his labors and writings did much to advance the interests of agricultural science. An old and respected member of the craft has forever left us in the person of Peter J. Hillman, superintendent of Salem Field cemetery.

The New York Florists' Club has passed through a very pleasant winter, has had several exhibitions and a number of creditable essays on roses, carnations, etc., also a few illustrated lectures. One of the principal features have been working in the field. It is the Chrysanthemum show, to be held next fall at Madison Square Garden. All are presented, and very liberal premiums are offered. This show will be well worthy of the interest and interest in the Queen of Autumn and other seasonable specialties.

H. A. LANGJAHN,
Vice-President of New York, East.

Massachusetts, East.

To the President and Members of the S. A. F. O. H.

Again it is my privilege to report satisfaction in the blossoming of the carnations. In speaking, with a steady but noticeable increase in the demand for the choice product of the commercial florist, roses in particular. The supply was somewhat irregular the past winter, as everybody being in crop at one time, all went out together. It is claimed by some of the choicest growers that grafted stock is more of a cropper than plants on own roots. I agree with them, particularly as to two and the three-car-old plants.

In January and February Beauties were scarce, not only in this market, but in other large rose centers. The supply in this variety, not a good box of yellows all winter. Don Silens could be had in limited quantities, but fairly good. If friends of this variety will graft them and give them the attention as you do Beauties, I think they will have no cause for regret.

Beauties, Brides and Bridemaids were excellent the whole season. Liberty was a disappointment to some, as it poorly refused to grow from Christmas to April, under the most favorable conditions and surroundings. It has some friends in Massachusetts, who are anxious to grow from Christmas to April, under the most favorable conditions and surroundings. It has some friends in Massachusetts, who are anxious to grow from Christmas to April, under the most favorable conditions and surroundings. It has some friends in Massachusetts, who are anxious to grow from Christmas to April, under the most favorable conditions and surroundings.

Carnations the past year were in extra fine and had an important place in the floral market. Many novelties were to be seen, from time to time, but the Mrs. Thomas variety took the lead in the month of May, and was supreme in her class.

Wholesale houses report increase in all lines of flowers. Prices for the season are good; the Silens normal failure. The Boston Flower Growers' Co-operative Association report an increase in the aggregate sales. We soon need a larger building to accommodate the demands of the ever-increasing number of growers. Retailers report a fair business in the whole, as the season held out longer than usual.

Bedding plants sold out clean and some kinds ran out early in the season, notably scarlet geraniums; prices remunerative. First class plants and other standard decorative plants were in demand in their season and wound up with the June weddings. Large plants of hydrangean were in demand from July 1 to date for lawn and terrace decoration. It is a grower's mistake to have them in bloom before August 1. Auction-room sales had their ups and downs; the aggregate was large. Returns fair, so I am informed. Greenhouse construction, as far as reported, has been $5 houses, 18 conservatories, seven ranges of glass, from three to seven houses each. I cannot give a correct estimate of number of feet of glass, the buildings vary so much in length, but consider the area large with material and labor so high.

The most noticeable event of the year was the opening of the new Horticultural Building, a magnificent structure costing more than a half million of dollars. Details and full description have appeared from time to time in the American Florist and other trade journals.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston, well revised by-laws and new officers, is now in working order, and in due season will take up some of the knotty and perplexing questions which ever stand face to face with the live and energetic florist, be he grower, middleman or storekeeper.

The Horticultural Club of Boston held its meetings by-law and new officers, is now in working order, and in due season will take up some of the knotty and perplexing questions which ever stand face to face with the live and energetic florist, be he grower, middleman or storekeeper.

The Massachusetts Horticultural Society has added many names to its long list of members the past year, and, with its new home and appointments, starts out anew with bright prospects and many things in its favor to do for the past year, and to exert its influence in a wider field of that grand and noble work it has been engaged in so many years with such signal success.

The Arnold Arboretum continues to receive and exchange plants, trees, seeds and cuttings from all quarters of the world. To this institution too much credit cannot be given.

Northern Ohio.

To the President and Members of the S. A. F. O. H.

I have the honor of submitting the following: From information gathered, business has been very good, and perhaps slightly better than the previous year. The demand for blooming plants for the holiday trade keeps increasing. The Decoration Day trade in cut flowers and blooming plants, as far as Cleveland is concerned, has been ahead of former years. There was a scarcity of everything, principally so on account of the very backward season. The trade in bedding plants was better than the previous year. Considerable remodeling and enlarging in greenhouses is going on in and around Cleveland.

The past season has been a hard one for field carnations, on account of the very severe rains during the months of May and June, the effects of which have caused a loss in the field of at least 50 per cent to most growers.

A grafting step forward has been the selection of a practical florist and greenhouse man to fill the office of superintendent of parks for the city of Cleveland.

I would recommend the establishing of a glass house plant by the society, as the prices of glass keep soaring skyward in consequence of the trust.

T. C. BAETZEL,
Vice-President for Northern Ohio.

Missouri.

To the President and Members of the S. A. F. O. H.

The past year has been one of the most profitable years for florists (growers and retailers alike). Prices for roses and carnations were above the average and sales reported better all along, with but few exceptions.

There is a growing tendency for blooming plants for both Christmas and Easter, with fairly good supply, plants being preferable to high priced flowers to most flower buyers.

Carnations are grown here quite extensively; there has been a very large increase in sales, mostly for carnations in roses our supply falls very short and most of them have to be shipped here from other states.

Fancy Caladiums at the Pan-American Exposition. Exhibited by H. A. Dreer,

For here can be found a collection, correctly named, of everything that is hardy on this continent, and many suitable for any place out-of-doors, no matter where. The evergreens, which suffered severely last winter, recruited beyond expectations with the favorable weather and plenty of rain in April and May.

Large quantities of shrubbery and herbaceous plants have been planted in the vicinity of Boston on the banks and slopes of the E. & A. R. R., where it was depressed to a way with the grade crossings, making a park entrance, as it were, into the city. It is well worth consideration, if not imitation, by any corporation entering a city or otherwise through an open or depressed railroad bed.

The Boston Department of Parks has done a great deal of planting the past year, this being a favorable spring for the work. Since they have about 12,000 acres under control. The new speedway was opened in May on the banks of the winding Charles river, from the cottage garden to the great park. The old Bay State is hard at work for the advancement of horticulture, floriculture, arboriculture and the cultivation of the beautiful.

The Metropolitan Park Commissioners have also added to their holdings during the year. They have about 12,000 acres under control. P. R. MATHISON, Vice-president for Massachusetts, East Boston, August 1, 1901.

During the laying out of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition grounds there will be an immense quantity of hardy roses, shrubs and various plants needed to be planted this and next year.

We hope to see all the florists here in 1903 to visit the great or greatest of expositions.

FRED C. WEBBER.

To the President and Members of the S. A. F. O. H.

Our small state, I am pleased to report, has had a very prosperous year. While the present quiet season is rather a long one, we have our fashionable Newport, where considerable business is done during the summer season, both by resident florists and others from New York City.

In cut flowers this state produces enough for our home trade and a considerable quantity to ship to other markets outside. Of the two popular flowers, American Beauty roses and violets, there is generally a shortage.

Business in the holidays was very satisfactory; plants in bloom and with berries and Nut selling well. Christmas flowering plants for Easter—azaleas taking the lead.

Easter trade the past season was somewhat curtailed by the wet weather, provided for and by heavy rains on Easter Saturday and Sunday, interfering with late buyers and the delivery of plants sold in the open air.

The trade were fairly well satisfied with the volume of business done under the circumstances.

The bedding plant trade the past spring was about on an average, says they receive prices somewhat better.

The best and increased demand for hardy stock for outdoor planting.

Well grown Boston ferns and kentias find a ready market. They do not sell as well as formerly, but the poorly grown plants sold at department stores at low prices seemed to have killed the popularity of this plant.

About the only new carnation to be recorded and grown at this season on account of its sale at Baltimore, Md., from this state was the Beau Ideal, of the Daybreak order, by Mr. N. J. J. Jr., of New York, who secured a certificate of merit. Quite a number of other new varieties have been shown by other florists from recent seasons in this state, of which we expect to hear more later.

Very little building of a commercial nature has been done this season, on account of the high price of material, although there has been some, and quite a little building on private places.

Floral exhibitions are held regularly several times each season by the Rhode Island Horticultural Society, which are not very well attended by the public. I am sorry to say,

T. J. JOHNSON.

Iowa.

To the President and Members of the S. A. F.

I am pleased to submit the following report for the state of Iowa. The florists' conditions in general throughout the state have been excellent for the past year, and are now in a healthy condition.

The flower trade has been good; potted plants fair. Holiday trade in general has been excellent, especially that of Easter. Many growers report increase of 10 to 25 per cent in prices and business over that of last year.

A number of new houses have been erected at various points in the state, and many growers are holding back on account of the very high price of glass at this time.

The average rainfall for the past two months, with a temperature ranging as high as 115 degrees, accompanied by a burning sun, has made it extremely trying on all plant life. Field carnations have fared badly. These conditions have been favorable to red and white outdoor plants, and we have them by the teeming millions.

The past winter was comparatively mild, and decorative shrubbery of all kinds came through in good condition.

The State Fair contained a fair representation of florists' exhibits. Plans are under consideration which, if carried out, will add material to the landscape features of the State grounds.

The city of Des Moines has adopted plans for a new park, and has set a large example, and the use of this area for a city park.

The annual session of the State Horticultural Society was held in Des Moines, and of horticultural interests held within the past year, but florists are not represented as they should be in this regard.

In close with hearty congratulations for the securing of our national charter, the thirty-first anniversary of our society, and the commercial interests which it represents.

A. T. ERWIN,
State Vice-President for Iowa.

Nebraska.

To the President and Members of the S. A. F. As vice-president of your society for the state of Nebraska I take pleasure in submitting the following report.

Judging from the reports all over the state the past year has been one of the most successful business years for the past decade. Most of this has been that flowers command a more uniform price than ever before and all the florists have felt encouraged to buy and raise and make more liberal shipments. The weather, too, during the past year has been very favorable for outdoor cultivation, and rain falling during the winter months, and no hail to speak of that did any damage.

The Bermuda Harrisii lily has been another failure for Easter, as fully 40 to 60 per cent were diseased, whereas the Longiflorum (Jellevue) was not diseased at all. It is undoubtedly the most profitable lily a florist can cultivate. The annual Horticultural Show, held last year at Lincoln, was very creditable to the florists, and from many valuable papers both in cut flowers and plants. These shows held annually stimulate more and more a competition among growers, and a good-natured rivalry exists among them all as to who can make the most effective.

The Nebraska Florists' Society, which meets once a month in Omaha, has done good work this year. Several of our most valuable papers have been read by its members on the cultivation of plants and cut flowers. It is anxious to help to recruit and increase its membership is constantly on the increase.

During the early spring a Japanese concern had a store in Omaha, and for several days, and thousands of Oriental plant curiosities were disposed of without trouble at good prices. The moral of this is that the people are always looking for something new and rare. The florists should do well to prepare themselves with novelties.

J. J. HESS,
State Vice-President for Nebraska.

Maine.

To the President and Members of the S. A. F.

I beg leave to submit the following report of the condition of our trade in Maine for the past season. It has been a very successful year for our florists, the majority of whom have made a very gratifying profit. The sales of cut flowers within 25 per cent to 32 per cent advance on the previous year. The holiday and memorial trade was very satisfactory, and some florists generally ruled highly. Bolding plants and seedlings sold unusually well, many houses cleaning up their stock by the end of the season.

A number of florists have been enlarged their plants, and meeting the increasing demand of their business—while some depend quite largely upon the wholesale trade, others are growing a large quantity of cut flowers. Indeed, all have to patronize the wholesalers in times of emergency.

The spring season was rather late for outdoor planting, but the stock generally is looking well. Our short seasons make it necessary to get the plants into the field as early as may be to get the best results.

Two or three things are needed to advance the interests of the florist in our section. One is the growing of more and better flowers than at present. With present range of prices we cannot afford to pay our stock growers to advance our prices without a real advance in the size and quality of our home products. Another is the securing of a better market for our florists to one another, and a closer affiliation with the general society. In these times of depression we cannot afford to get away from one another. But very few Maine florists are members of this body. He who will not be a member of our society is handicapped to improve his methods must fall behind in the race. Another improvement would be a greater variety of prices and an effort to make to raise our prices in prosperous times to a standard of equality with the advance in all other lines of business. The florist who is cutting prices not only injures his neighbor but injures himself in the long run. Let co-operation and progress be our motto.

H. R. MITCHELL.

New Jersey.

To the President and Members of the S. A. F.

O. H. H. This year would appear to have been one of general progress in New Jersey, and the aggregate result of a successful season among the florists is very manifest. It is to those who are adding to their establishments. It is a difficult matter to get reliable figures for the past year, but I have a few florists who are one well qualified to speak, being engaged in that branch of the business, that there is no doubt but that we have had a better year than ever before, and more especially in the erection of private ranges of glass upon the manufacturing side, that has done more than any being built up in this state.

This growth and development of country houses with park gardens and greenhouses, more or less extensive, is a happy augury of a prosperous future for horticulture. It is something that our society should foster and assist in every possible way.

Here, in northern New Jersey, one of the most important residential sections of the eastern states, private estates predominate, and each year their name increases. It gives our society to note this fact, for the owners of these places are substantial patrons of horticulture, and it should be within the province of our work to do something for ornamental horticulture.

For example: The past winter, by reason of peculiar conditions long prevailing, was singularly disastrous in its effects upon vegetation. The plants were generally killed or immune, while others of generally accepted hardiness failed to withstand the ordeal. In such a season, the horticultural and florists' society render great service to horticulture in high places by collating and tabulating a series of reports, which, however, it is hard to get planting? Respectfully submitted,

A. HERRINGTON.

Western Pennsylvania.

To the Members of the S. A. F. O. H.

As vice-president of your society for the western Pennsylvania, I give you much pleasure to report trade conditions for the past year as good as the one previous, the cut flower trade having been a steady market throughout the year was steady, prices did not fluctuate as in other seasons. Christmas, however, was a heavy trade, and was a very noticeable increased demand for flowers of high grade, which sold at very high prices. Roses, geraniums and carnations grown around Pittsburgh and Allegheny were of good quality, but not in sufficient quantity to supply the demand. Lilium was a failure proved a failure with most growers; only a few had partial success. Christmas was a heavy trade was heavy; much stock was disposed of, but wholesale prices were too high, allowing very little profit to the retailer.

The plant trade in general was satisfactory, although the unfavorable conditions of the winter and the season hurt sales considerably, and much stock was unsold at the end of the season, which was a heavy trade cleaned out during the month of June, though at greatly reduced prices. Geraniums and cannas even were in greatest demand. Prices ruled about the same as last year. Nursery trade was better than last season; there was quite a demand for hardy shrubs and herbaceous plants.

Construction of greenhouses during the past season has been very active, and a large quantity of material had some effect; it was also very difficult to even procure glass at double former prices. The weather was very favorable for the better class than formerly. F. Jurki has put up two houses, each about 40 feet in length, for growing roses, and some other plants in our vicinity, and far enough away from the smoke and dirt of the city about eighteen miles.

The monthly meetings of the Florists' Club during the year have been very well attended and the club has been very successful in adding new members were added, among them the gardeners to private places and amateurs. The meeting of the club was held at the club of cut flowers in the month of June, which was most successful. Hardy roses, paeonies and a great variety of outdoor blooms were exhibited, everything properly labeled. It was a fine exhibition, the club paying the entire expense. Some flower shows should materially benefit the trade and also prove instructive as well as educational, giving the public an idea of what can be done in the way of beautiful places. Respectfully submitted,

E. C. LUDWIG.

FLOWERING PLANTS AND THEIR TREATMENT FOR CHRISTMAS SALES.

BY WILLIAM P. CRAIG.

(Read before the S. A. F. Convention at Buffalo.)

Christmas is the oldest and the grandest of our festivals, which "grows mellow and sweeter with the passage of the centuries."

It is now universally observed in all Christian countries by the laying aside, as far as may be, of the dreary cares of everyday life, by the resting from toil, and the general feeling of gladness and better impulses of the human heart.

How the children dream of the good times coming at Christmas, and how the elders, laying aside selfishness, give themselves over to the giving of gifts and to the making of hearts glad.

blooms are soft and easily bruised. Mme. Van der Cruyssen is much finer, and a better keeper, but more difficult to bring into bloom at this early date. We have succeeded in forcing it into fine bloom in a night temperature of 65 degrees, with the pots plunged in a manure bed of the temperature of 50 degrees to 60 degrees. This method is also useful for forcing Duc von Tholl and other early tulips for Christmas. Verveineana is the finest pink one and forces easily, and Deutsche Perle, white, which can be had without difficulty, is also good. It is well to have a few white ones, but the demand is very limited.

CYCLAMEN.—A well-grown and well-bloomed cyclamen is a very saleable Christmas plant and brings a good price; in fact, Christmas is the only profitable time to have cyclamen; plants which readily bring $12 to $24 a dozen, wholesale, at Christmas, drop to half these prices the week after, with very limited demand. The best way to grow cyclamen is to sow the seed about the middle of September to middle of October, and grow on without any check until Christmas of the year following. We have found them to do well in soil composed principally of leaf mould and very old cow manure, with about one-fourth the entire bulk of light loam, and the addition of a liberal sprinkling of bone meal.

BEGONIA GLOIRE DE LORRAINE.—What a grand addition to the list of Christmas plants this dainty, elegant, glorious begonia is! My townsman, Edwin Louisaie, on his exhibit at our last fall show, said: "This is not a century plant, but it is the plant of the century." That sounds a bit enthusiastic, but is quite allowable when all the good points of the plant are considered. The first season it came here it was quite a provoking plant to the propagator, who expected to strike cuttings in the winter time and could get no suitable wood; it does nothing but bloom in winter, and it is May or June before the wood which makes good cuttings comes up from the base of the plant; then it roots freely and plants struck at this time may be grown into fine, bushy specimens in six or eight-inch pots by Christmas. Tops taken from these plants in August and September make fine plants in four-inch pots by Christmas; it should be only lightly shaded in summer, and given plenty of air, but does not like much water on the foliage. It makes a fine subject for dinner table decoration when grown in round or oval pans. Several plants in a pan may be used. Use ordinary rose soil with the addition of one-eighth leaf mould.

BOUGAINVILLEA SANDERII.—This is a fine, showy plant and can be had at Christmas if the wood be ripened somewhat in September, and then forced in a night temperature of 65 degrees. The plant is of high decorative value.

BEGONIA INCARNATA GIGANTEA is a very showy plant of easy culture, and is in its best flowering condition at Christmas; it was, however, more valuable before the advent of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, which is vastly superior.

PIMELTA CHINENSIS.—A fine strain of these should be popular, although Mr. Van K. Harris, of Philadelphia, who had developed, by years of selection from the finest European strains, the best commercial type of Chinese primula I have seen, was compelled to give up growing them about ten years ago, because he could get only 25 cents apiece for grand plants in 6-inch pots. I think that now, when the demand for Christmas plants is so much greater, it would pay some one to take up their careful culture again.

CERODENDRON BALFOURII.—This plant is very showy and beautiful and can be had in fine bloom at Christmas if given a good "drying-off" to ripen the wood in September, and afterwards forced in a night temperature of 65 degrees.

DAPHNE OROBO.—This is a plant which has almost dropped out of cultivation; it is deliciously fragrant, and I am sure that well-grown plants in 5 or 6-inch pots, in full bloom, would meet with a ready sale at good prices.

ERICAS.—Several of these are admirable for Christmas. E. Wilmoreana being one of the best; but as I have had little experience growing ericas, I must refer you to the essays by experts on this question.

LIBONIA PENINSULENSIS is a bright, cheerful plant when in bloom, and is as easily grown as a stevia. Should be struck from cuttings in early spring; planted in open ground; lifted carefully in September, shaded for a few days and then grown in a cool greenhouse.

GERANIUM.—Some of the finer semi-double varieties, such as Jenn Viard, Alphonse Ricard and similar sorts, if well grown in 6-inch pots would be saleable, and are among the best of our window plants.

In addition to the plants I have named, Hives (Charles X. and Mary Lefebvre are the best), Hily of the valley, Roman hyacinths, early tulips, etc., may be forced into bloom; these bulbs, when grown in 4-inch pots, are very useful in the baskets of foliage and flowering plants now so popular at the holidays. These baskets and plateaus of flowering plants in combination with bright foliage plants, such as dracaenas, crotons, paladians, etc., with ferns and other graceful forms, offer largest scope for the florist's skill, and the time may come when the name of a floral artist will be coupled with this work in much the same way as we now speak of a masterpiece by Gainsborough or Titian.

The number of species of flowering plants suitable for Christmas, as at present grown, is quite limited. What a grand thing it would be if we could force at Christmas as great a variety as we can at Easter, and I believe that this is quite possible. I do not see why, with the aid of cold storage, all flowering shrubs usually grown at Easter can not be had at Christmas. What an addition, for instance, to the list of Christmas plants would be the now famous Crimson Rambler roses. And why could it not be lifted from the open ground in October or November and, after having made some roots, be allowed to stay outside until put to sleep by the cold weather and then carried over, entirely dormant, until the following year, when it could be started late in September or early in October, and brought into bloom by Christmas? And the same treatment would apply to mydrangeas, geniastas, etc., and to Anna Alexieff, Magna Charta, Mrs. Jno. Laing and other free-blooming roses. The hardy flowering shrubs, too, such as duzinas, weigelias, forsythias, flowering almond, etc., would be amenable to like treatment.

The Japanese cherry, also, which came into such favor last Easter, could be successfully treated in this way and would be very valuable. If done in a large way the proportionate cost would not be too great. I verily believe in the near future we shall see in operation such cold storage facilities as I have suggested, and it will not be without profit to the operator.

I will now close in the hope that some of the older and more experienced men in the audience will correct any mistakes I have made and name any good Christmas plants I have omitted.

FARGO, N. D.—Fred Heath, of Gardiner, has purchased twenty acres of land adjoining the city limits and will put in a system of hothouses for growing vegetables. There will be two houses, each 225 feet long.

WICHITA, KAN.—The seed men in Kansas are now having their inning. The farmers are buying some stores out.

HORTICULTURE OF THE PAST CENTURY.

BY JOHN N. MAY.

[Read before the S. A. F. Convention at Buffalo.]

It may be safely said that in no branch of agriculture or business has so great a change been attained than in that of horticulture during the past century, more particularly so in the case of the florist, as we shall hereafter see. One of the pioneers of the florist business in New York, who died only a few years ago in the late Buchanan administration, told me that when he first started in business, which was, I believe, some time in the thirties, he would take his stock of plants, which he had to offer into the city each morning in a basket, and stand on the street corner near the present site of Trinity Church, which was at that time the fashionable part of the city; at the end of the days sales he thought five cents to a good day's business, and if by chance he happened to realize anything over a dollar, he felt extra happy with the result of something so little beyond his daily needs. The class of goods the market required in those days were a few rose geraniums, sweet alyssum, marigolds; purple and white flowers of small diameter were considered extra large fine flowers; these, with a few other varieties of flowers, now almost forgotten, constituted the whole list to draw from. Some few years before the venerable old man died, he remarked to me that the florist business had come back to the dates given above, was more of a novelty to him than a real fact, and he did not live to see it. In fact, the florist business in this country, in which probably greater advances were made than in any previous decade, not only in the variety of plants and flowers, but in the whole line of our business; the method made possible, the limitation of flowers to growers, the art in making them up for the masses, from the elaborate decorations to the cut bouquets.

I fancy some will be inclined to criticize this statement, and probably with good grounds to do so; but it is remembered that during this same decade funeral directors were made up with such mottoes as the following: "We are colored in the product of a gold fireman who had lost his life in trying to save those of his fellow beings his comrades thought they would show respect for, and respect he did so, they consulted a florist, ordering what they thought a nice piece suitable for the occasion," as it is the case with respect to the lettering should read, they left the matter with the florist, to use his own judgment as to what would be most suitable for the florist thought, I suppose, it would be appropriate to have it different from the stereotyped kind of such things, so instead this: "See you later."

On another occasion, a fireman having died, his wife consulted a florist for a wreath of similar instructions. This time the florist put in lettering to read, "Gone to his last rest," and the wife was so worsted by the result. The company to which this highly respected man belonged ordered a pillow of all choice flowers; and especially a wreath of flowers of immortelles, with the lettering as above in red. These and many similar absurdities, in the designs especially, are credited to the florist business, but they must not be taken as the type of the whole business, as the exception and the exception is so treated.

In another class of our business—that of lawn and park decorations—some monsters have occasionally been met in the shape of camels, crocodiles, elephants, elongated serpents and scorpions, bears, buffaloes, etc., or imitations of them, made up with great labor and expense, but which do not belong to the florist business, they undoubtedly they were made up in many cases to satisfy the whims of a few persons, and are creditably something sensational. Fortunately, the general public are becoming better educated to the value of the florist business, and the use to which nature's gems (plants and flowers) should be put; happily, these monstrous attractions are gradually disappearing, and their greatest advocates, and a more graceful and ornamental use is made of the plants, and the florist business is being appreciated by the public at large. Where, a few years ago, the style of flower gardens generally was, strictly formal, and almost exclusively confined to carpet bedding, a change has now come over the same, and many, very many are now taking a more natural form, and owing entirely to the beauty and charm of their gardens and pleasure grounds. This applies not only to the so-called bedding plants, but also to the trees, shrubs, etc., used in ornamenting lawns, parks, etc. Many of these were formerly trimmed and kept in all sorts of shapes and forms—contortions and deformities, they might be more aptly called, and this is gradually disappearing, and a more natural form allowed to develop. In many of the choices evergreens, a more natural form cannot be improved upon. What can be more charmingly beautiful than a fine specimen of a Norway spruce (Picea excelsa), or very many others, too numerous to mention.

With the closing of the last century no one can dispute the fact that horticulture in every branch has made vast strides throughout this century, and many plants that a few years ago were considered rare and very difficult to grow, so much so that but comparatively few were tempted to try the cultivation of them. One instance will be sufficient to illustrate this to the child farmer, and to the child gardener; these were considered too expensive a luxury for any except the very wealthy to attempt to grow, and they were supposed to be difficult to grow and harder to get into bloom. Since that date they have steadily made their way into the hands of the cultivator, and are now a regular commercial product, and not in limited quantities either. The question will probably arise in the mind of the cultivator, how is it from an extreme rarity to an abundance? Simply because some of our more enterprising florists, and gardeners, have, in violation of nature's laws, reduced the method of cultivation to thoroughly practical basis, and instead of treating the plants in the usual course of Turkish bath-like treatment, they have treated them as a more or less natural course congenial to the plants. When one considers the natural habitat of, say, the Cattleya Trianae, a more or less tropical plant, from 15 to 50 feet high, subject to all the winds of the hemisphere, is it congenial to this plant to place it in a greenhouse, kept hot in July weather and in continual steaming vapor? I should think not; and the same law applies to all the greenhouses kept hot in July. Is this more thorough to our plants in general the better will be our success. In fact, it is largely a question of ventilation, and to simplify the cultivation of all plants and flowers for the nineteenth century.

It has been the object of the new century, I have been asked to tell you. This is something more of a prophet's problem to answer, but I can only say, that in the present list, such as I am; but if indications point to anything, we are, horticulturally, only infants now. We are giving plants, and flowers, and 100 feet high, covering a million plants each, and illuminated by electricity, in the very nature of Roses, and other plants, to market with stems 10 feet long and as big as ordinary walking sticks, with flowers on the stems, and the plants to be kept in the house as big as paeonia flowers, with stems five feet long that will not bend when shaken; violets, in large sizes as silver dollars, with 15-inch stems and warranted never to lose their fragrance. All these and every other kind of flowers will be produced in the proportion and sold to the dear retailers at—for roses, from two to three dollars per 100; for carnations, from one to two dollars, 10 cents per 100, etc., all down the list. Then the growers will think they are making fortunes for themselves, and the dear retailers will grumble a little more than they do now at the size and quality, so that the young generation of growers will have a happy time of it.

In the plant list you will see will be sold for the first time the cuttings from the other plants, not as they are offered today by so many advertisers at such handsome paying prices as $4 per 100 for 2-inch Amaranth at $2 per 100 for general list of tea roses, etc.; these prices are far too high to be maintained. All other plants will be offered at proportionate rates. This, in conjunction with a general list of plants, and a general list of the florist needs, such as glass, lumber, iron pipe, etc., will, of course, induce the florist to buy in advance of the needs, the trusts make still further combinations, so as to put prices still higher and enable you to buy in advance of the needs of the sport fancy automobiles, and the various paraphernalia which go with them. Then, I presume the florist will all be contented with such handsome remunerative prices, particularly as the express companies will take all the advantage of the improved times of the florist, and still advance their charges for transportation of the goods to market.

Some of you will probably say I am treating the subject of the new century too seriously; so, by the way of diversion, I hold out a steady hand, and you may as well sift the matter out and have a royal good time doing so.

Coal is said "there was millions in it" (some of the schemes he was advocating). Well, perhaps there is millions in the florist business, and a good row of them.

THE FUEL QUESTION IN GREENHOUSE HEATING.

By PROF. L. R. TAFT.

[Read before the S. A. F. Convention at Buffalo.]

Of the many problems with whose solution every florist is vexed, there is none, the labor question, perhaps, being alone excepted, that is of more importance than that of the fuel supply. Each one must decide for himself what particular kind, or mixture of kinds, will give the best results under the conditions that he can give them. Having determined this, he must then make such arrangements as will give the greatest possible amount of heat from them.

Fuel is profitable.

The word fuel is applied to any substance that is burned, and in the burning or combustion of any chemical substance takes place between one or more of the substances of which it is composed, and the oxygen of the air, at a rate as fast as it can be kept light. The elements in fuel that are most useful for purposes of combustion are called carbon, hydrogen and oxygen. As oxygen is present in large quantities in the air, it is of no commercial importance, but it must be present in a certain amount in the fuel for the economical burning of any fuel in a furnace, careful attention must be paid to have the fuel contain the proper amount of the size of the chimney flues so proportioned as to supply the needed amount of oxygen. As the air contains 21 per cent of oxygen, more than one-fifth oxygen, the arrangement must be such as to admit nearly four and one-half pounds of air for each pound of oxygen needed.

To produce the complete combustion of carbon to carbon dioxide (CO₂), for one part of carbon two parts of oxygen are required, or, making the complete combustion, the weight for the combustion of one pound of carbon 2.86 pounds of oxygen will be necessary, and to supply this 15 pounds of air will be required.

If the combustion is incomplete, carbon monoxide will be formed, and for only one-half as much air, or six pounds for each pound of carbon, will be needed. As will be shown later, the combustion product when carbon monoxide is formed has less than one-third the heating power of combustion of carbon to carbon dioxide. Carbon is produced when the supply of air is deficient, and the other when it is ample, the importance of securing the complete combustion of carbon being rated at one, while carbon is 12, nitrogen 14 and oxygen 16. It really constitutes a very considerable portion of its volume in many fuels. In the combustion of hydrogen, two atoms unite with one of oxygen, producing water, but in the combustion of hydrogen, one pound of hydrogen joins itself to eight pounds of oxygen, producing nine pounds of water, and for this 35 pounds of air are required.

Thus for the complete combustion of the 1,200 pounds of carbon and 100 pounds of hydrogen in one ton of Pocahontas coal, 900 pounds of air are required, or nearly 12 pounds per pound of coal. As it takes 10 cubic feet of air to weigh one cubic foot, sufficient air must be provided for 286.071 cubic feet of air to pass through the grate while one ton of Pocahontas coal is undergoing combustion.

Air required for the combustion of one ton of Pocahontas coal: $1,700 \times 12 + 100 \times 35 = 23,900$ cu. ft. of air.

As it is not probable that every atom of carbon and hydrogen will come in contact with every atom of oxygen, sufficient oxygen is necessary in practice to double the above amount of air and furnish 24 pounds for each pound of carbon, and 35 pounds for each pound of hydrogen, or 590,242 cubic feet of air. If 12 pounds per hour per square foot of grate are burned, 100 square feet of grate will require 120,000 cubic feet of air, or 10,000 cubic feet will be required for each square foot of grate.

The heating volume, or, to use the correct scientific term, the heating value of a combustible substance is found by taking one pound and by burning it, ascertain how many degrees it will raise one pound of water one pound of water, the combustion taking place at the point of its greatest density, which is at 32 degrees Fahrenheit. The heating value in this country is what is commonly known as a British thermal unit, or, abbreviated, B. T. U. This is the heat required to raise the temperature of one pound of water one degree.

Having ascertained this for the various elements of which combustible bodies are composed, it is only necessary to know their analysis to be able to determine their calorific power.

The following is commonly accepted as the heating efficiency of the substances named: Hydrogen to water, 151,800 B. T. U. Carbon to carbon dioxide, 14,500 B. T. U. Carbon to carbon monoxide, 4,450 B. T. U. Carbon to carbon dioxide, 14,500 B. T. U. To show the method of determining the heating value of any combustible, let us suppose one pound of a certain coal to contain 80 per cent carbon, 5 per cent hydrogen and 2 per cent sulphur. Using the above value we have, $14,500 \times .80 + 151,800 \times .05 + 4,450 \times .02 = 12,320$.

It is to be noted that the combustion must be perfect and all the heat must be saved. In actual practice this is not possible, the loss being more than one-third.

Theoretical Value of Fuel.

The amount of heat that can be developed from one ton of coal is dependent upon the quality of the better grades of coal is sufficient to evaporate from 10 to 16 pounds of water from and at a temperature of 212 degrees Fahrenheit with clean boilers and skilful firing only about three-fourths of this can be secured. Not only trees, coal, but all the earthy matter, varying from 3 to 15, or even 20 per cent, which remains as ashes or clinkers, but also the air, which is used, a large amount falls through the grate bars.

Imperfect combustion also greatly reduces the amount of heat that can be obtained from fuel, as, owing to a small supply of air, the combustion is not complete, and the formation of carbon monoxide, instead of carbon dioxide.

In the case of anthracite coal, the best results will be secured when there is a thin fire and sufficient air admitted. The best fuel particle of carbon will be brought in contact with free oxygen.

It is known that about one-fourth of a heat unit (2575) is required to raise a pound of air one degree Fahrenheit or, if the openings through the grate admitted too much air, would require not far from 1,500 heat units to raise this extra air to the temperature of the chimney, supposing this to be 600 degrees.

It has been stated that the best produced by the combustion of one pound of coal, is sufficient to evaporate 15 pounds of water, and the question naturally arises, "What is the weight of a pound of coal which may contain 10 per cent of ash to furnish as much heat as a pound of pure carbon."

This apparent inconsistency is due to the fact that coal, and soft coal in particular, contains a considerable amount of hydrogen, combined with carbon, forming what is called hydrocarbon, which will burn after being brought into a gaseous form.

The combustion of hydrogen generates an enormous heat, 62,000 heat units being liberated by the burning of one pound of hydrogen. The combustion of hydrogen is of special importance that there should be no great surplus in the amount of air, as a serious loss of water vapor is caused. The excess of air are supplied for each pound of carbon burned, the gas will have a temperature of 1,000 degrees Fahrenheit. If the excess of carbon will not ignite, and on cooling the particles of carbon will form soot and smoke, which will first form in the lower part of boiler tubes and lessen their efficiency.

There is still further loss of heat by radiation from the convective surface of the ash-pit and all exposed portions of the boiler, and this should be guarded against by the use of thick water brick walls and other means.

The amount of air can be regulated in part by the ash-pit doors and by the depth of fire. The wood door should be closed, and the movement of the air will be checked and, becoming warmed, it will have a much less cooling effect than the cold air. In the cases of combustion and the fire surfaces of the boilers. There is also a large amount of heat lost from the chimney. If the chimney gases can be spoken of as lost, as it is necessary to produce a draught and thus secure the perfect combustion. The loss will be greater when the amount of air furnished is in excess of the amount required for the combustion. With 20 pounds of air, a maximum draught can be secured when the loss is but one-eighth, with 25 pounds of air, one-fourth of the heat will be lost, while with 48 pounds of air the loss will be lost, and the draught will be lost up the chimney will be one-half that given off by the coal.

Wood as Fuel.

The fuel first used, and the one that for a long time was the only one available, was soft wood charcoal, but for some years other materials have taken its place except in a few localities. In sections remote from coal fields and where wood is scarce, wood is even now used to a considerable extent in the production of steam for greenhouse heating and other purposes.

The average wood used as a fuel contains from 25 to 50 per cent of water, the larger proportion being found when freshly cut, and from 30 to 50 per cent of carbon. In the process of combustion the water is first evaporated, leaving a large amount of steam, a gaseous portion is then driven off and the oxidation of the carbon follows. Hickory, white oak, hickory, maple and chestnut are the most valuable woods for fuel purposes. The combustible value of white pine, elm and the more or less soft woods is about one-half to two-thirds that of hard maple.

Petroleum.

In some sections considerable attention has been paid to the use of crude oil as a fuel for greenhouses heating.

The best oil of specific gravity of 0.875, and costing 3 cents per gallon, or $1.25 per barrel of 42 gallons it will cost 25 cents to evaporate 20 pounds of water. If the gravity is decreased to 0.775 and the price remains the same the expense for fuel to evaporate 1,000 pounds of water will be 24 cents per barrel.

With coal showing 10,000 B. T. U. worth 30¢ per ton it will cost 15 cents to evaporate 1,000 pounds of water, and to evaporate 9,000 B. T. U. and costs $2.50 per ton the expense will be about 14 cents. As these figures show the oil of low gravity is about 10 per cent of coal, but considerable allowance should be made for the saving in labor in firing and removing ash from the boiler.

At the present price of crude oil, its cost as fuel is more than double that of good steam coal, as shown by the replies made to the writer from florists having about the same amount of glass, some using coal and others oil.

Natural Gas.

Natural gas also takes a high place as a fuel for steam making, as it is very effective, clean, and requires but little care. While it is readily transported, its use of fuel is small, and in most of the gas-beds the pressure is lessening, indicating that the supply is not large. The calorific value of gas varies per pound from that of the best grades of coal (22,000 B. T. U.) to nearly double that value (25,000 B. T. U.) of a cubic foot of 1,000 cu. ft. various analyses show that the above amount of gas is equal to about 70 to 75 pounds of coal. Gas having a specific gravity less than that of natural gas has a calorific value in B. T. U. which can be approximated from 10 to 15 cents. As compared with coal the actual value of the gas is considerably increased by the saving in labor over coal.

The heating value of common illuminating gas is somewhat less than that of natural gas, ranging from 60,000 to 90,000 B. T. U., which gives it a value of 8 to 12 cents per 1,000 cu. ft.

Coal.

That the coal used as fuel is merely fossilized vegetation is shown by the fact that we find it in all forms from peat to anthracite coal, varying in proportion to the amount of distillation of the woody fiber has been carried. Aside from peat and lignite, which are not used as fuel, there are three which are well known as bituminous and anthracite coals. The former contains 20 per cent or more of volatile matter, the middle grades a strong bituminous odor with a heavy black smoke and a yellow flame. Some bituminous coals are soft, hard as lignite, while others are soft and fibrous, crumbling under rough handling. The forms that burn with a short flame contain 80 to 90 per cent of volatile matter and are called semi-bituminous, while the rich bituminous coals which burn with a very long flame, owing to the large amount of volatile matter found in them, contain but 65 to 75 per cent of carbon.

Speaking of bituminous coal, William Kent, chief mechanical assessor of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, vol. 2, page 90: "If we draw a line from the Pocahontas field in the southern part of West Virginia, and West Virginia, through Maryland, a little west of Cumberland, and through Somerset, Kentucky and Clinchfield in Tennessee, it will pass through the coal field containing the best steam coals mined in the United States. The coals in this area, when in their chemical composition, the combustible portion varying only two or three per cent from the best grades of carbon, and containing little volatile matter. Their heating power is likewise remarkably uniform, averaging 15,700 British thermal units per pound of coal. The probable variation of not over two per cent from this figure. The ash and moisture of all the coals along this line is very low, the ash varying no doubt with the care used in preparing the coal for market. These coals are very properly classed as semi-bituminous."

"Traveling northwardly at right angles to and from any point on this line, the coal gradually increases in volatile matter and decreases in heating value. In the coals mined on the line, the volatile matter is only about 20 per cent of the total weight of the combustible matter. It is merely a matter of the composition of marsh gas, CH₄, having but little oxygen and every pound of it is worth nearly 15 pounds of carbon. Further to the northwest, however, while the proportion of the volatile matter increases it becomes of poorer quality being highest in oxygen. In some parts of Ohio the volatile matter is worth no more per pound than carbon, and in most of Ohio coal it is worth less.

Of the anthracite coals, the so-called semi-anthracite contains from 35 to 40 per cent of carbon, and an amount of volatile matter, while in the hard anthracites we find 90 to 94 per cent of carbon, 3 to 8 per cent of volatile matter, and 2 to 4 per cent of ash. Anthracite coals are black, with a bright luster, and are so hard that they stand transportation with little loss, owing to the small amount of carbon, they are, weight for weight, the most valuable of coals.

Coal extensively mined in 27 of the states and territories. Anthracite coal is found principally in eastern Pennsylvania, although it has been opened in Colorado and New Mexico. The states leading in the production of bituminous coal are Pennsylvania, Illinois and West Virginia. In the latter the cost of the coal at the mine is less than in the other states.

The semi-bituminous coals of West Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania, as stated by Mr. Kent, contain about 19 per cent of volatile matter and 70 per cent of carbon. The states named contain the following percentages of carbon, volatile matter and ash:

Chemical Analyses of Coal from Different States.	Carbon	Volatile matter	Ash
	per cent.	per cent.	per cent.
Bituminous Pennsylvania	85	35	.08
Ohio	82	32	.09
Kentucky	79	29	.09
Indiana	48	40	.10
Illinois	47	42	.09
Missouri	47	38	.09
Iowa	44	40	.10

The analyses also show a marked difference in the amounts of water contained in the coals of the various states; thus, for the Pennsylvania coals it averages 20 per cent, more than one-half as much as in Indiana coals it averages 4 per cent, in Illinois 6 per cent and in Iowa 8 per cent.

Variation in the Amount of Combustible Matter.

Professors Lord and Haas (Transactions of the American Institute of Mining Engineers, 1897), state that per pound of combustible matter, there are 100 lbs. of water. In all areas, have a substantially uniform heating value per pound of the combustible portion. Careful analyses of the coals of the same mine, and in actual boiler tests shows a considerable variation in the actual heating value of coals from the same mine, even from the same mine. The first difference is noted in the amount of ash. Thus, in the better grades of Lehigh and Lackawanna anthracite the percentage of ash is generally between 10 and 15, while in the pea, buckwheat and screenings it may amount to 15 or 20. In bituminous coal we find the range even greater. In Pocahontas, Cumberland and other semi-bituminous coals, the percentage of ash is 10 per cent of non-combustible material. Pittsburg and Ohio coals usually contain from 6 to 10 per cent of ash, and as high as 15 per cent of ash and slack.

The coals of the western states show a smaller percentage of carbon and a larger percentage of volatile matter than the bituminous coals of Pennsylvania, but the amount of volatile matter does not necessarily determine its calorific value, as, if the proportion of oxygen is large, the heating value of the hydrogen will be less. In the preparation of anthracite coal for the market it is screened into various sizes, known as steamboat (1 1/2 to 1 3/4 in.), large stove (2 to 2 1/2 in.), small stove (3/4 to 1 1/4 in.), and chestnut (3/4 to 1 in.). There is also a fine grade of 1/4 to 3/8 yard, and a very fine grade of 1/8 to 1/4 inch. The amount of fine coal graded according to its size as pea, No. 1 buckwheat, No. 2 buckwheat or rice, No. 3 buckwheat, and No. 4 buckwheat, and the latter being so fine that it will pass through perforations 3-32 of an inch in diameter. Aside from the slight increase in the percentage of slate and refuse found in these finer grades of coal, they contain the same amount of combustible material as the larger grades. The term "screenings" and "slack" are commonly applied to the finer grades of coal, while at the same time the term "fine" is given to the larger grades.

The burning of these fine coals presents various difficulties, one being that the particles pack together and form a crust, which is difficult to provide a sufficient amount of air to secure perfect combustion, without using a draught strong enough to draw the air up the chimney or unduly cool the gases of combustion. On the other hand, when the coal is so fine that it will pass through the grate bars, when fine coal, either anthracite or bituminous, is burned in a grate, the best results are secured by having a thin fire, one to two inches in depth, while in the case of pea, No. 1 buckwheat, it should be five or six inches deep. With too strong a draught, or too thin a fire, the gases are diluted and cooled, while if the draught is so weak or the fire too heavy for the draught, combustion will be incomplete, carbon monoxide will be formed, and less heat will result.

The requirements for the successful burning of these finer grades of coal, are: (1) the use of a grate having spaces of from 3/4 to 3/8 of an inch, according to the size of coal; (2) thin fires and frequent firing; (3) thin fires and frequent firing; (4) arrangements for feeding the fires and cleaning the grate; (5) a draught strong enough to draw the air up the chimney or unduly cool the gases of combustion. The best results are secured with a forced draught and a mechanical stoker.

Measurements of the Efficiency of Boilers.

In order that there may be some common basis for comparison, various measures of the efficiency of boilers have been devised. A horizontal boiler is usually taken as a standard, and Watt, judging from the performance of the engines of his day, estimated the amount of steam that it would require per hour as that developed from a cubic foot of water, or about 60 pounds, of steam, or the raising of 33,000 pounds continuously one foot per minute.

At the present time the efficiency of engines has increased, and the evaporation of 30 pounds of water at 100 degrees, or 7 1/2 pounds at 212 degrees, is considered as one horse power, is regarded as the standard of measurement of a commercial horse-power.

The standard measurement is based on the heating surface of the boiler, and on the efficiency of boiler surface. It is a simple matter to ascertain the number of feet of boiler surface required for each horse-power. The amount of water shown that about three pounds of water, from and at 212 degrees, can be evaporated from each foot of boiler surface, and on the horizontal tubular boiler, 12 feet of heating surface in a horizontal tubular boiler, or 12 feet of heating surface for one horse-power.

The following table shows the relation of horse power and heating surface in different types of boilers (C. W. B. Jones, Peabody and Miller, New York, 1900).

Type of boiler.	Area of heating surface, sq. ft.	Vol. of water, cu. ft.	St. H. P.	Heating surface, sq. ft.
Vertical tubular	10 to 15	10 to 15	10 to 15	10 to 15
Horizontal tubular	10 to 15	10 to 15	10 to 15	10 to 15
Water Tube, with cylinder	10 to 15	10 to 15	10 to 15	10 to 15

Pounds of Coal Per Horse Power Per Pound of Steam.

In answering the questions submitted to me regarding (1) the amount of each kind of coal required to evaporate one pound of water, and (2) the amount of each kind of coal required to produce a horse-power per hour in heating plants of different sizes, I three hundred and thirty-five pounds of coal, and on the horizontal tubular boiler, 12 feet of heating surface in a horizontal tubular boiler, or 12 feet of heating surface for one horse-power.

The following table shows the relation of horse power and heating surface in different types of boilers (C. W. B. Jones, Peabody and Miller, New York, 1900).

Coal used.	Per pound of coal, bustle.	Per pound of coal, bustle.
Pittsburg	8.52	9.16
Best W. Virginia coal (Pocahontas, New River, Loup Creek, Acme and Tackler)	9.51	10.46
Second class W. Virginia coal (Keystone, Winifrede, Eagle, Chesapeake and Mt. Vernon)	8.76	9.42
Ohio coal (Weiston, Mine Run)	8.05	8.23
Kentucky coal (Jellico, Mine Run)	9.15	9.40

From the above it would seem that Pocahontas coal from West Virginia, and the other semi-bituminous coals, have about 10 per cent more heating value than the Pittsburg coals, while the lower grade of West Virginia coals have practically the same value as the Pittsburg coals. The Ohio coals have about 7 per cent less value than Pittsburg and 15 per cent less than Pocahontas. The Jellico coals from Kentucky stand about midway between the Pittsburg and West Virginia coals of the better class.

Among the tests of Mr. Barrus was one in which Cumberland bituminous, Lackawanna broken, Nova Scotia culm, and a mixture of one part of N. S. culm with three parts of pea and dust were burned in the same boiler.

In estimating the value of the coal, Lehigh broken is taken at $5.50.

From the above tables it will be seen that Cumberland coal averages very well with the best Lehigh broken and egg coal, and considerably higher than Lehigh run-of-heap or the Lackawanna coals, and that the mixtures of the fine anthracite coals with Cumberland bituminous coal average about the same as approaches within 30 per cent of that of the Cumberland coal. It is well known that the temperature of combustion of coals is much lower than when the coarser coals are burned; hence unless forced draught is used, a considerable increase is necessary in the size of the boiler and the grate area should be at least 25 per cent greater.

When fine coal is burned it should be thrown on the grate in thin layers and at intervals somewhat shorter than is necessary for coarse coal, and the sizer bar should be used quite frequently. This will not only considerably increase the labor of firing, but will make a regular fireman necessary.

Selection of Coal.

Whatever showing may be made in tests of the different kinds of coal, the result will have but little effect on many places in the selection of the coal that is to be used. This is true in the west especially as a considerable number of coal mines in the vicinity at a price that is less than the freight upon coal brought from Pennsylvania or West Virginia. Except in localities where they can be delivered by boat, these coals will have little sale west of the Mississippi, and the same is true in many sections in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Michigan.

Dr. R. H. Thurston (Engine and Boiler Tests, page 22), says: "Other things being equal, the fuel which gives the greatest quantity of available heat for the total money expenditure, by its complete combustion in such a manner as to give the highest possible temperature" is the best fuel.

In the case of the fuel is the one that contains of its kind the largest amount of available combustible material, but, from the standpoint of the boiler or other consumer, the cost should be taken into account and this will include, not only what is paid for the fuel, but the expense for handling, storing, and of firing the boilers, including the removal of the ashes.

Where low freight rates can be secured, Pocahontas and other first-class West Virginia coal is rated at about 9.5 pounds of steam from and at 212 degrees per pound of coal, or about 10 per cent better than Hooking Valley, Jackson Hill, Owsoso, Bay City, or other Ohio and Michigan brands which will not make a showing of more than 8 pounds of steam per pound of coal. The first named coals have two serious drawbacks, the first being that they crumble so readily that after being handled two or three times fully 50 per cent becomes slack. The other objection is that they burn slowly and require a much larger grate than the free-burning, rich bituminous coal.

In New England, New York and the Middle Atlantic states the question of freight must also be taken into consideration. While egg anthracite is a desirable grade of coal, small that a night fireman could be afforded, the choice will generally be between the Cumberland and Pittsburg coals, the former of which shows an average combustible value about 10 per cent greater than the other.

In sections near the mines, or where low freight rates can be secured, the finer grades of anthracite may be used as the basis of the fuel, but it is a desirable grade of coal, and fuel has already been pointed out. The trouble can be somewhat lessened by mixing with the screenings, or Cumberland coal to two or three parts of screenings. A large grate and a good draught are needed and, in this case, fair results can be obtained without using forced draught.

In plants on the largest scale, the saving can often be made in the coal bill when screenings can be cheaply obtained, if they are used as a part of the fuel. If they are burned with forced draught, either with or without a mechanical stoker. The use of the draught, and the new plant is to be erected, adds but little or nothing to the first cost, as its use will effect a saving of 10 to 25 per cent in the cost of fuel required, and an even greater saving in the cost of the chimney.

The mechanical stoker will not only lessen the loss of steam when the doors are opened, but will reduce the amount of coal that falls through the grate.

Coal for Greenhouse Ranges of Different Sizes.

As will be seen by the program, a request has been made that application be made to greenhouse requiring different amounts of coal, ranging from 200 to 500 lbs. per hour. In a general way, it can be said that where the larger amounts of coal are burned the greatest economy will be obtained as will be seen in the following table. There will be relatively less loss by radiation from the boiler; the amount of heat used in securing a an fortunate in having at my disposal the results of many thousands of actual tests made with boilers of the same and different styles using various kinds and grades of coal. A considerable number of these tests were made by George H. Barrus, and published in his book, "Boiler Tests," while the others are the "Transactions of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers," and in various engineering magazines or works on boiler practice.

Before giving any of the results of these tests, I wish to be understood as believing that a single test of any fuel in a single kind of boiler is of but little value in determining the real efficiency of the boiler, or the fuels, as either might make a much better showing if some other fuel is used for the boiler, or a different boiler is provided in which to test the fuel. It is also well known that if several tests are made under what are apparently identical conditions, using the same boiler and the same fireman (using fuel from the same pile, in the same amounts and at similar intervals, and it is burned with the same draught, on days when the thermometer and barometer give similar readings, no two of the results are likely to be identical, the difference often reaching 2 1/2 per cent.

Hence it should be understood that the results given cannot be guaranteed in practice, but as care has been taken to use only such tests as seem well authenticated and as were made under ordinary conditions, there should be no difficulty in duplicating the results.

Location has much to do with the cost of fuel, and what might be good practice in one state might be unprofitable in another, hence recommendations can only be general.

A large number of tests were made by John W. Hill, at Cincinnati, in 1897, in which he used a great variety of coals in a pair of Galloway firebox boilers of about 10 horse-power, under the usual conditions for a carefully conducted boiler test. The tests lasted which was a return horizontal tubular of 100 horse-power. The following table shows the efficiency of the different coals:

draught will also be less in a larger plant, that is, small in proportion to the amount of coal consumed; in the larger plants, too, it will be possible to give more attention to the firing, and the result will be still a high and even steam pressure, which will result in the economy of fuel. In fact, it may be said to be largely a matter of the fireman and the method of firing. Thus, in the smaller plants, where the fireman gives only part of the time to the boilers, some of the free-burning lump bituminous coals will give good satisfaction, although for small boilers, and in all seasons where bituminous coals are available, some of the egg anthracite coals may be preferred. Where the plants are large enough to warrant a regular staff of firemen, the superiority of Pocahontas and other semi-bituminous coals might warrant their use. Under similar conditions, it might be profitable to investigate the question of combining one part of Cumberland, or other semi-bituminous coal with two or three parts of huckwauk, peco, or cast anthracite coal. Where this mixture can be laid down at two-thirds the cost of Cumberland coals, it might be considered as providing proper conditions are provided for its combustion.

Whatever the kind of fuel used, its economical burning depends so much upon the proper adjustment of the area of the grate and heating surfaces of the boiler, and the height and size of the chimney to be radiating surface to be supplied with steam that the following suggestions are made:

Ratio of Grate and Heating Surface to Radiating Surface.

Except in small boilers, when it is safest to estimate 15 feet of heating surface as required for one horse-power, it is customary to consider 20 feet of heating surface per horse-power, and to use from 70 to 100 feet of radiation for each horse-power, the larger amount being used for the larger boiler. The proportion between grate and heating surface will depend largely upon the kind of fuel used. The best rate of combustion of burning from 20 to 50 feet of heating surface to one foot of grate surface. For slow burning coal, with a combination of more than 40 pounds per square foot of grate per hour, the smaller figures may be used, but with free-burning coals and where the coal consumption is more than 15 pounds per square foot of grate per hour, it will be economical to have 45 to 50 feet of heating surface for each foot of grate surface. Most authorities consider from 12 to 15 pounds of coal (both bituminous and anthracite), per square foot of grate surface, as the most economical rate of consumption, and with good fuel and a fairly efficient boiler it is very seldom that more than four pounds of coal per horse-power will be required.

Height, Area and Horse-Power of Chimney.

It has been determined that the effectiveness of a chimney varies with the square of its diameter and the square root of its height. Thus, a chimney that is four feet in diameter and four times as efficient as one that is but two feet in diameter, while if 144 feet in height it will only answer for a boiler twice as large as if it were 36 feet high.

Of the various formulas for determining the relative size of the grate and chimney the following is much used. The area of the grate should equal the product of the smallest area of the chimney flue and the square root of its height for anthracite coal, while for bituminous coal the product is divided by 1.83. Thus, for anthracite coal, if the grate has an area of 25 square feet and the chimney is 4 feet high, the area of the chimney flue should be 4.5 feet for anthracite coal, and about 2.5 feet for bituminous coal. As a rule, the area of the chimney flue should not be equal to that of the boiler tubes and this is generally about one-tenth the grate area.

To multiply the grate area by the number of pounds of coal to be burned per hour per square foot of grate and dividing the product by the number of pounds of coal required per horse-power per hour, the horse-power of the chimney can be determined. For very large chimneys a careful study and adjustment of his grate, heating and radiating areas, and then selects the fuel that will furnish the larger number of horses under the conditions it will have to meet, for the smallest cost per ton, he will do much towards settling his own fuel problem.

NEW YORK.

Special Convention Train.

BUFFALO, Monday Night.—We have only just arrived and here, we feel, the misfortune, yet truly the good fortune, to be domiciled away from the New York crowd. Ours was a pleasant journey westward; yes, an extremely enjoyable one. Bright and early, even before sunrise in some cases, those comprising the New York delegation were astir; many had to travel considerable distance to the point of rendezvous. (You know we consider all as New Yorkers who depend on that great city in a business way.) Never a larger, a better, a more jovial or intelligent crowd of florists left New York to attend any convention than that which came by special train to Buffalo today. On the streets, the ferryboats and on the platforms there were couples and groups and crowds, giving an expression to pleasant feelings. All were on an edge of intense excitement as the train left Weehawken promptly at 9:15 a. m. and as the iron steed puffed and snorted away through waving woods and flower-covered fields there was a continuous handshaking throughout the six cars. It was like a great big happy family reunion. The commissary department occupied the front car and here the officers of the club in shirt sleeves dispensed various colored and proofs of liquid.

CARNATIONS.

Would you advise placing bones from the slaughter-houses in the bottom of carnation and rose benches? Is blood, as it comes from the slaughter-house, good to use as a fertilizer for roses and carnations?
T. K.

In answering the above questions I would say that I cannot answer the first question with any degree of certainty, as I have never tried nor heard of any one else trying bones (whole bones as I understand it) as fertilizer in the greenhouse bench. My judgment, however, would be that it would not be advisable.

We all know the value of bone-meal as a fertilizer, and very few growers are ever entirely without it. I think it is necessary that it should be ground, or, at least, crushed, in order that the plant food may be drawn from it in the short time it is on the bench. Being ground into dust and very small bits allows it to decay in a short time; whereas the hard outside shell of the bone would keep decomposition from setting in for a long time and in an ordinary raised bench where the soil is renewed every year the plants would get no benefit from them, as very little decaying would take place in the hand in a solid bed of roses which is to remain undisturbed for several years they might do some good if broken up some, so that the softer, inner part of the bones would be exposed, which would allow decomposition to set in much sooner.

For carnations we would not care to use bone in any way except in a ground state, and the finer it is ground the better we like it. We use a grade called bone-flour, and it is as fine as any wheat flour, and we like it much better than we do the coarser grades. The results are quicker and there is no danger of a good part of it remaining in the soil after the season is over. However, the above is merely my opinion in regard to the bones, and as experiment is the source of all knowledge I would advise T. K. to experiment along that line. He can take a small part of a bench (say about enough for 50 or 100 plants) and place on the bottom a small quantity of bones, and in another section a larger quantity of bones, and watch carefully the results. I don't think there is any danger of doing any harm, but the question is, "will they benefit the plants any." The quantity to use is also guess work, but I imagine that about three cubic inches of bones to one square foot of bench space in the one section, and about double that quantity in the other section would give him a very good idea of its value, if it has any. It would be well to take for this experiment part of a good light bench of which the rest is to be mixed with ground bone and notice what difference there may be. I should very much like to hear through the columns of THE REVIEW what the results are.

I suppose the blood is in a dry state, and if it is, it can be used on the benches with good results. We have never used blood alone, but we have used with good results a mixture of blood and bone, and strength of the blood as a plant food, but I imagine it should be used in about the same quantity, or perhaps a little more than you do of bone meal. You can soon see how much to put on after a little experimenting. I think though, that I would rather use it as a dressing after the plants are established, and if T. K. gets it right from the slaughter-house I would advise mixing it with fine soil in equal parts and allowing it to lay until he is ready to put a light dressing on his benches. That would give it a chance to become thoroughly decomposed and no bad results would be apt to follow.

Up along the lakes you can see them haul the refuse from the fish houses out into the country and put it on the land, where it is plowed under. It is claimed that the improvement in the crops raised on the land where this is used is something wonderful. The only objection to this fish house refuse is its odor, which is as loud as its use is beneficial to the land. I imagine the slaughter-house refuse would do just as much good as that from the fish house, on outside land, and I think either one would make good

Geranium "Pasteur" occupies an oblong bed some 30x8 ft. The variety "Pasteur" is new to us. It is a strong grower, very free flowering and healthy and the truss is very large. It is a brilliant orange scarlet and the exhibit of C. W. Ward of the Cottage Gardens.

The petunia bed is an oblong about 18x8 ft. As can be seen, they are single varieties, which are always preferable to the double. They were planted early, quickly made a good growth, and are now very attractive. It is a very fine strain. They are the exhibit of Henry A. Dreer.

A large circle 24 ft. in diameter was planted by Henry A. Dreer with verbenas. It was planted about the 20th of May. The plants were cut down to within 4 or 5 inches of the ground, leaving no flowers on them. They have repeatedly been watered and hoed, as have all the beds. They quickly made a start and for the past month have been this neighborhood. The varieties are La Favorite, double white; Mrs. E. G. Hill, single salmon; S. A. Nutt, double crimson; Mrs. Frances Perkins, the best double pink; and Athlete, a splendid single vivid scarlet. The exhibit of Henry A. Dreer.

The exhibit of fancy caladiums by Henry A. Dreer consists of about 75. The picture does not include the whole lot sent here. They are nicely grown plants and are now in 12-inch pots. They occupy a space in the south conservatory.

HOW CAN THE RELATION BETWEEN GROWER AND RETAILER BE IMPROVED.

BY FRED C. W. BROWN.

[Read before the Canadian Horticultural Ass'n at London, Ont.]

For a good, vigorous argument or discussion on this subject it is necessary for us to admit the existing dissatisfaction or necessity for improvement in our relationship; we must agree that there does not appear at the present time to be that friendliness or confidence that is, I might say, positively essential to success in our particular line of business. I think you will agree that there does exist a something, a perpetual feeling of apprehension, that at any time there is apt to arise a difficulty between grower and seller, a feeling that we do not altogether understand each other, and that there still remains a gulf to be spanned so that we might the more thoroughly appreciate the efforts made by both sides of the trade, to bring floriculture and its appertaining branches to a state of unassailable perfection. The necessity for thought in this, one of the most serious problems facing the florist today, is great.

We are, I believe, on the verge of a change in the methods of dealing one with the other. Unnecessary to state, any change brought about in the business dealings of wholesale and retail florists should be for the improvement of our relationship. It is to be hoped that before taking any serious steps in this direction, we would give every idea the most serious consideration, for it is an admitted fact that if a wholesaler offend a retailer, he damages his own cause as well as injures the relationship of his best friend. It therefore necessitates us to act with the utmost caution; to feel, as it were every step before advancing.

It appears to me that the first and one of the most necessary steps is that we should become more closely allied; that we should bring ourselves to a better understanding of each other by organizations; special meetings, if possible, should be arranged whereby we could frequently through the winter months be brought into closer contact. I am perfectly well aware of the fact that there are organizations all through the country with this very purpose included in its intentions; I fear they rarely suc-stuff for top dressing if it were mixed with soil and allowed to dry and decompose thoroughly.

I would certainly be tempted to try some of it, if it were possible to get some of the stuff handy, but our slaughter-houses here claim they use up the whole hog and nothing goes to waste except the squeal.
